CHRISTMAS EVE.

The stockings were hung in the corner,
Three of them, all in a row;
Tall Paul's and dear little Mabel's,
And Will's, with its scarlet toe.
The good-night kisses were given,
The evening prayers were said;
And the quiet that reigned in the parlor, told
That the children had gone to bed.

Upstairs, from the quiet nursery,
Where the lamp burned soft and low,
I could hear the prattle of voices
Come floating down below.
And I knew bright eyes were trying
A longer and watch to keep;
Lest Santa Claus pass by them,
And they be left asleep.

But "said the voice of Mabel,
"Perhaps he won't come, because
Lucy Gray says there's no such person
As good old Santa Claus.
And if there isn't truly,
Why then he won't come, you know;
And our stockings will all be empty,
Even the toe dear down in the toe."

Then up rose Will, indignant
At such a supposition as that;
Such a sudden piece of fancies,
And visions of Christmas blue
Of a rocking-horse saddled and bridled,
Of stockings stuffed full to the toe,
Of picture and games and candies,
And a wonderful trumpet to blow—

And with eyes all aglow with excitement
As I took through the doorway I peep,
Said: "She don't know anything 'bout it;
I'm better, and older, and stronger,
I wish you would stop your talking,
For our stockings are both there."—Youth's Companion.

TWO DAYS BEFORE CHRISTMAS.

"One two-dollar bill, two one-dollars, and a fifty-cent piece, and two twenty-fives. That's five dollars. And I want to get a present for mamma and papa and Molly and Ned and Tom and the two maid-girls."

Ella Lindsay, otherwise Trot Lindsay, was sitting at the nursery window, with the contents of a tin "bank" piled in her lap, and a forest of silver paper, fancifully cut and perforated card, on the floor around her. Outside the snow was falling slowly, drifting into odd corners of city streets, piling itself on roofs, and lodging on tops of lamp-posts and house-fronts. But up above, between the high roofs, a little glimpse of sunny sky was visible.

"It's a perfect shame! It always storms when I want to do anything!" Trot went on, soliloquizing. "I ain't going to make any presents, and this principle of musical composition the composer seems to have forgotten. The grave mistake was discovered by several well-known Chicago musicians, and was the occasion of some merriment. "Hey," said one of them, Mr. Pratt, for he may write the fourth part!"—N. Y. Evening Post.

Here Trot suddenly jumped down from her chair, and went over to the other window, where her sixteen-year-old sister Molly was sewing.

"Molly, the sun is coming out!"

Molly precipitately pulled up a piece of cotton cloth, to hide a doll's scarlet silk shoe that she had been stealthily lacing together, and began to hem busily.

"Is it?"

"Molly, wouldn't you go out with me to some stores? I want to get Christmas things."

"O, my dear! Go out in this slush and snow? Mamma and I are going out to-morrow, and you shall go, too."

"But I want to go to-day. It'll storm to-morrow, maybe, or you'll have a headache, or something."

"No, I shan't. Why don't you finish what you're doing?"

"Nobody'll care for old silver crosses," said Trot, hopelessly, "and they're awful bothersome. I've got to get seven presents."

"O, you needn't mind getting presents, Trot. Don't trouble your little head about it."

"Why, everybody's going to give me something, am I sure?"

"Maybe. But—"

Here a call from the next room interrupted Molly, and she hurried away, leaving Trot standing by her rocking-chair with a cloudy brow. A gleam of sunshine at this moment shone into the room, and glistened on the heap of silver paper under the window. Trot took a sudden resolution. Putting the money in her pocket, she ran into her own room, pulled off her apron, and put on her cloak.

"I'll go alone, I'm big enough," she thought, and, trembling with excitement, she hunted for her hat. But here came a difficulty. Molly had taken her "common hat" to fix over, and she could not wear her best blue velvet cap with white plumes, cut into a snow-storm. She stood a moment at a loss what to do, then ran into her sister's room, and, after rummaging in the closet, produced Molly's "second best" hat, a black felt trimmed with pink roses.

"There! it won't hurt this to get snowed on," Trot said, surveying herself in the glass, with a satisfied air. A funny small figure she was, too, with the dressy hat tied down over her short golden-brown curls, and a wrinkle of care in the middle of her fair little forehead.

She knew there was an umbrella in the hall. As for gloves and rubbers, she entirely forgot those in her eagerness to be gone. Holding her breath, and momentarily in terror of some one's stopping her, she tiptoed down stairs and through the hall. Seizing her father's big umbrella, which was about as long as she was tall, she hastened out, shut the door with a slam, feeling very important as she heard the night-latch click, and was fairly on the street.

She knew the way down town, and having tried in vain to open the umbrella went off, dragging it by the tassel, pondering deeply about what she should get.

"I guess I'll find something for mamma, first," thought Trot, splashing through the watery snow with thin kid boots, and a good deal worried by the necessity of keeping the umbrella out of people's way. So, when she finally arrived in the vicinity of Winter street, she first directed her attention to dry-goods stores. Seeing an attractive display of silks and laces in window, she entered, and, walking past a row of tills dollars and forty cents, handed over that amount with a sigh of relief.

"That's just right. You needn't send it. I'll carry it."

"Come, now, you can't do that. You're not as large as your maid-servant, you know. Where do you live?"

"Columbus avenue. I'm Ella Lindsay."

"All right. What number?"

"I don't know, but I can findit. You do up the bundle."

Despite her resolution, Trot was so appalled at the size and weight of the package returned, that she gave up all idea of getting another calico dress for Ann, and lavished heavily out into the street, with her basket, pouch, bundle and umbrella. Her little feet were soaked and very tired indeed, and the persistent storm almost blinded her; but there were Ned and Tom and Molly to be thought of.

"I wonder," she mused, shifting the heavy bundle, as the string cut her fingers, "if I couldn't buy a mustache for Ned. I heard him asking he had one, and people sell hair. I'll try!" And walking into a gentleman's furnishing store, she astonished a smart-looking boy behind the counter:

"Do you have mustaches?"

"Have what?"

"Mustaches, please."

The boy surveyed Trot a moment, and then was overcome by the "ridiculous side of the thing," as he said to a fellow-clerk, when he had finished laughing.

"Here's a young one wants a mustache. Did you ever?"

"Maybe she wants a false one for theatricals or something."

"I don't. I want it for my brother Ned," said Trot, stamping her ground. "He ain't got one, and I heard him say he wanted one. Have you got 'em or not?" she inquired, sitting down in the face as the boy disappeared behind the counter with a yell of laughter.

Trot certainly was a funny sight standing there, with the bedraggled big hat and flaming cheeks. The senior clerk, with a wink to the proprietor, remarked:

"I shouldn't think your brother could be old enough to have a mustache. Tell him to wait till it comes."

Now if Trot had one failing it was temper. Stamping her little foot on the ground she exclaimed, with flashing eyes:

"I shan't either! He's old enough now, and if he hasn't got a mustache on his upper lip like you, he's got a dear little one on his ear, so there!"

A perfect shriek of laughter followed this speech, in the midst of which Trot rushed out of the store and hurried back along the stormy street with tears rolling down her hot cheeks.

"Oh dear! oh dear! Those hateful people! I wish I hadn't come at all. Everybody laughs at me, and I can't go home with presents for only half of 'em."

One dollar and fifty-five cents, and three presents to get beside Ann's. Oh! I'd better go back to the man that sold things so cheap!"

What a long way it was back, struggling against the wind and storm! And how Trot's arm ached! But there was the store at last. She dragged herself in and asked, with what strength she had left, for the man that sold her the basket.

"He has gone to dinner," said the lady behind the counter.

Poor Trot sat down on her bundle of calico and burst into tears of such despair that the lady hurried round the counter and took her in her arms.

"Why, my child, how wet you are, and how cold! How far have you to go?"

"I can't go at all till I get my presents," sobbed persistent Trot; and then she told her story, still sitting on the calico, and ended with a sudden question:

"What time is it?"

"About half-past three."

"Oh! ever so long past lunch. What will they think is the matter?"

"Where is your house?" asked the lady, who had carried Trot into a rear room, and, having set her down by a stove, was trying to draw off her sodden shoes.

"Columbus avenue."

"But what number?"

"I don't know, but I know the house because there is a dead oleander in the balcony next door."

Trot chatted away while the lady proceeded to hang up her stockings, dry her drenched feet, and remove her wet clothing.

"I must find some things for you to wear home, and then I think I will take you there in a car. Jamie will take my place for a while," she said, looking toward a boy in the store.

"But I haven't got my presents."

"Oh! I forgot. You want to get four, and have about a dollar and a half, haven't you? Suppose you get some candy for your brothers?"

"You don't keep it, do you?"

"No, but Jamie can go and get you some. Two pounds, at thirty cents a pound, would leave you ninety-five cents."

"Only ninety-five cents for Molly and Ann?"

"You can get a little ivory tablet, that I think your sister would like, for half a dollar. And for Ann—"

The lady thought a moment.

"Wouldn't she like some bright ribbon? Jamie can get that, too. Three yards of scarlet ribbon, enough for bows for neck and hair, will be very pretty."

Poor Trot was too much tired out to care what was done. When Jamie returned with his purchases she was half asleep, done up in a shawl. The multiplicity of her bundles decided the lady to call a cab, in which Trot was presently placed, her wet clothes in a separate parcel, and her feet encased in a pair of number four socks, that had to be tied on. Very thankful was she to come in sight of the aforesaid dead oleander

A BILL was introduced and referred in the Senate, on the 10th, to authorize the exchange of subsidiary coin for trade dollars. A bill was reported favorably from the Committee on Military Affairs, authorizing the appointment of Lieut. Jaimie Powell as an Assistant Surgeon in the Army, in explanation. It was stated that the doctor had already rendered services as Assistant Surgeon, but could not be regularly appointed because he had served in the Confederate army when a minor; the bill was then passed. Mr. Blaine introduced a resolution directing the House to transmit to the Senate a copy of the testimony of James E. Anderson relating to Senator Stanley Matthews, taken before the House Committee. The bill relating to Presidential elections was further discussed by Messrs. Morgan and Edmunds supporting, and Mr. Jones (Florida) opposing, the measure. In the House, the Speaker announced the members of the Yellow Fever Inquiry Committee, as follows: Gibson, Hooper, Herndon, Morse, Axtell, Harmer and Chittenden. The Consular and Diplomatic and the Naval Appropriation bills (the latter appropriating $1,000,000 for new vessels) were further discussed. The Senate bill to regulate Presidential elections was referred to a committee on the 11th.

A NUMBER of bills were introduced and referred in the Senate, on the 13th. The Consular and Diplomatic and the Naval Appropriation bills were reported, with amendments. A motion to take up the Pacific Railroad bill was rejected—yeas, 24; nays, 32. The resolution of Mr. Blaine in regard to statements to be sent to any country or persons engaged in the transportation of property by railroad from one State to another, or from any foreign country, to receive any greater or less amount of compensation from any person than another for like service, and prohibits the pooling of freights, etc.

THE Fortification Appropriation bill was passed in the Senate, on the 12th, with amendments increasing the appropriation for the armament of sea-coast fortifications from $125,000 to $250,000, and for the armament and repair of fortifications from $100,000 to $200,000. The House bill to correct the error in the amendment of the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill of last year was passed. A resolution to fix, reduce and organize the Army of the United States, and to make rules for its government and regulation, were submitted from the Joint Select Committee to prepare a bill for the reorganization of the Army; the bill provides that the Army shall consist of not more than 25,000 enlisted men, and was made the special order for Jan. 3. The House bill making an appropriation for the support of the West Point Military Academy was amended, and passed. A resolution was offered in the House directing inquiry into the conduct of Chief Supervisor of Elections Davenport at the last election in New York. A resolution was adopted ordering a recess from Dec. 20 to Jan. 6. Speeches were made on the de jure Tweed bill. Bills were introduced—repealing so much of the Sundry Civil bill as appropriates $2,000 for the payment of the claims of C. F. Durkirk, late Indian Agent of the Ponca Agency; a substitute for the Pension Appropriation bill; removing the political disabilities of ex-Senator James Chesnut, of South Carolina. A bill was introduced and referred to repeal the duty on quinine.

BILLS were introduced in the Senate, on the 13th, to provide for the temporary increase of the army in emergency; to amend the law relating to pensions; to secure a more efficient collection of the revenue from cigars. A bill was passed to authorize the payment of the registered bonds stolen from the Manhattan Savings Institution of New York. The bill in regard to the count of the Electoral vote was further debated, and, finally, passed by a vote of 35 to 23. Adjourned to the 16th. . . . In the House the bill looking to the investigation of the conduct of J. Dascomb, Supervisor of Elections at New York, was amended so as to make the investigation extend to his conduct on the days of registration, and was then adopted without debate. A bill was introduced and referred to make the trade-dollar a legal tender.

SENATE not in session on the 14th. . . . In the House, the Senate bill authorizing the issue of duplicate bonds in lieu of bonds stolen from the Manhattan Savings Institution, of New York, was passed. The Indian Appropriation bill was reported and made the special order for the 18th. The Senate amendments to the Military Academy Appropriation bill were finally disagreed to. A resolution was adopted relating the late Indian raids in Kansas and Nebraska and the capture of marauders, and calling on the Secretary of the Interior for information on the same; he is also requested to give speedy and responsible protection to settlers in the vicinity of the outbreaks in Kansas and Nebraska. The Geneva Award bill was further discussed. The Senate bill to regulate Presidential elections was referred to a committee on the 15th.

THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor and Proprietor.

TUESDAY, DEC. 24, - 1878

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Dec. 19, 1878

EDITOR SENTINEL.

I suppose every one knows Dr. Mary Walker, but for the benefit of any of your readers who may not have the pleasure, I will explain that he—no, she—well then, it is a wholly unprecedented compound of feminine name with masculine habiliments. To say that it is a strong minded creature would be putting the matter too mildly. She-Mary is a tourer. It is always stared at and hooted when it appears on the street, and not without reason, for it wears a Derby hat, a coat with a sort of brief petticoat attachment, a pair of unmistakable pantaloons, and a gold headed cane. Once in a while it has even more unpleasant experiences than being hooted and stared at. For example, it arrived in town the other day from Washington, which unhappy capital forms its usual haunt, and going to a hotel demanded lodging. Now a hotel clerk is commonly supposed to be equal to any ordinary emergency, but this was a staggerer. The young man gasped and stammered, but eventually managed to inquire after the sex of his would be guest. This rash question drew down on his devoted head a storm of indignant abuse from the irascible "Dr.," which threatened to overwhelm him, but he finally rallied and succeeded in scoring his nondescript out of the building. Before it could get to another hotel, it was gently collared by a policeman, who probably thought he had captured the original "What is it?" and led into a neighboring police station, whence it was shortly afterward liberated, and immediately sought the Windsor, followed by an enthusiastic crowd of ragmuffins. Here again it was gently but firmly "bounced" and finding all its efforts to be recognized as a man and brother futile, gave it up for the moment and disappeard.

The next morning, however it reappeared to public view under the escort of a policeman, who, this time, conducted his mysterious prize to Superintendent Wallings office to get its status officially defined, and learn his own duty in the premises. The Superintendent, who is the most gallant of men, listened patiently to the voluble indignation of his erratic prisoner, and then shrewdly guessing, from the length of its tongue, that it must be a woman, said "Madam, I think you have not committed any offence against the laws. The wearing of clothes is a matter of taste, so long as they are not used for purposes of disguise. No policeman has a right to investigate your trousers, or your petticoats." And then triumphant, at last, Dr. Mary Walker walked.

'Little Phil," Sheridan would rather I have no doubt, be attacked with sabre and cannon than with red tape and law books, but he meets the latter as bravely as the former. A very important suit is now pending against him in the Circuit Court here, growing out of a claim made on him for something like half a million of dollars for seizing somebody's cotton plantation down in Louisiana during the war. I dropped into the court-room the other afternoon and found it crowded with notabilities. The gallant General was present in person, looking cool enough, but a little as though he would liked a chance to ride at the head of his own cavalrymen into the ranks of the other side, which is marshaled in this instance by his old companion in arms, General Ben. Butler, who was the cynosure of all eyes. I am afraid Benjamin never was very pretty, and he certainly don't seem to improve in looks very rapidly. He has grown enormously corpulent, so that he waddles most absurdly, and has lost all signs of a neck; and as he pranced heavily about before the bar, keeping one of those terrible optics on the jury, while the other steadily intimidated the witness he was examining, he looked more like a great big turtle than any thing else I can think of. The trial promises to be a long one.

Col. Mapleson, the celebrated London impresario, at present giving Italian Opera here, with "Her Majesty's" opera troupe, will, I fear, soon be ready to shake off the dust of this "blurated" country and exit our shores forever. First, he has enrolled himself with the directors of the Academy of Music, and got that august body not only down on him, but into a row among themselves. Then he has sought to compel the fair and melodious Minnie Hauk to sing at his "sacred" concerts on Sunday evening, threatening fines and imprisonment as the penalty of her refusal, but has only succeeded in getting himself thoroughly snubbed by the press and public for his pains. Several other little unpleasantnesses have also arisen in connection with his alleged partnership with ticket speculators; and, to crown all, he has been arrested at the instance of the Society for the Prevention of cruelty to children, for introducing a ballet danced by little girls. This last straw has pretty nearly broken the camel's back. The noble Briton, almost exploding with indignation, denounces the proceeding as "a most high handed outrage, you know," and would like to have the Earl of Beaconsfield declare war with the Yankees at once. However, the Colonel has got a good troupe, and is making money so fast out of these same Yankees, that he will perhaps swallow his rage and continue to favor us.

And apropos of the S. F. P. C. C., that somewhat officious organization has again distinguished itself this week by interfering to stop the exhibition, by its parents, of a baby eight months old, weighing just one pound. This exhibition has attracted crowds for several weeks, and don't seem to have damaged the microscopic infant; but the feelings of the Society were outraged, so it arrested the parents and ruthlessly cut off the yield of their business, with about as much reason as that other busybody, Mr. Anthony Comstock of the "Society for the Suppression of Vice," lately forced a picture owner to take out of his window a copy of Hans Makart's magnificent historical painting, "Charles the Fifth's Entry into Antwerp," on account of some partially nude figures which it contains. Such "Jacks-in office" are an annoying nuisance.

A cheerful state of things in a court of justice is now being uncovered in the impeachment trial of Justice Walter S. Pinckney, of one of the City Police Courts. The evidence clearly establishes the fact, well known to all frequenters of his court room, that Justice Pinkney has for a couple of years or more been an habitual drunkard. Frequently absenting himself from his post for weeks together, and very often holding court when too drunk to stand, or to comprehend what was going on. It has also been testified, that he has frequently rendered openly corrupt judgments, taken bribes, buncksmatted subordinates, and, in short, done about everything which a man in his position could do to lay himself open to impeachment and imprisonment. He has even been arrested on the street for disorderly conduct, and locked up over night. This sort of thing has been going on for many months, and yet this incompetent drunkard has been permitted to keep on his disgraceful way, hindering justice and drawing a salary almost as large as that of a United States Supreme Court Judge. Even now during his trial he continues to hold court after his usual style. If any one asks why this is thus, I shall be obliged to give it up. Perhaps we shall find out before Pinckney's trial is ended. RADIX.

An effort is being made to remove the county seat of Iowa county to Portland. The citizens of Portland offer to build $40,000 worth of county buildings if the change can be made.

Events at the opening of the present session of Congress indicate that the Republican party was never better united and equipped for agressive action than it is now.

Political.

As a Christian Republican, General Grant declined to be knighted by the king of Portugal, the other day.

The Washington correspondent of the Cincinnati Gazette says that Senator Conkling announces himself as irreversibly for Grant for President in 1880.

The Democratic Vicsburg Herald claims that Hayes is always tangled up by his endeavor to be a friend of the South and a good Radical at the same time.

The line of Republican Governors of Pennsylvania has been unbroken for 20 years.

Wade Hampton, ex rebel, is believed to have got control of the South Carolina Legislature, and to have made himself Governor when he was not elected, by the bribery of Republican members. He will reap his reward by going to the Senate, when Sumtis, the ex slave, for taking a bribe, goes to the penitentiary.

Senator Bruce says Grant would be the choice of nine tenths of the Republicans of the South.

A Washington letter to the Cleveland Herald says President Hayes is one of the best Grant men in the country, and would like to see him his successor as well as his predecessor.

Col. Scott, President of the United States Senate, is duly recorded in the Parisian papers, as having arrived in Paris.

The Boston Post says the entire Democratic party is in favor of Grant as King of Bulgaria. This desire to do him honor by promoting him to high places in other lands, has been the leading desire of the Democratic party ever since the affair at Fort Donelson. His operations then and subsequently during the war led them to regard him as as a flourishing boil that they were anxious to see come to flaming maturity on another man's nose.

South Carolina now has two one-legged Senators. Butler got his shot off while fighting for the rebellion, while Hampton's was kicked off by a mule. History must decide which is the most honorable wound.

Christine Nilsson is to be made Grand Mistress of the Evening Star, a ladies masonic lodge to which only the distinguished ladies ladies of Europe are admitted.

The Boston Herald says: "Beaconsfield plays whist." There was a suspicion at the Berlin Congress that he also took a hand at bluff occasionally.

The receipts of hogs at Chicago during last week were 211 107 head—the largest on record.

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to-day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, if you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Cheorem, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

The Senate Electoral Count Bill.

The following is the bill introduced by Mr. Edmunds and passed by the Senate, on the 14th, making legal provisions for regulating the counting of the Electoral votes for President and Vice-President:

A BILL to amend sundry provisions of Chap. 1 Title 3, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, relating to Presidential elections and to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice President, and the decision of questions arising thereon.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Electors of President and Vice President shall be appointed in each State on the first Tuesday in October in every year in which proceedings for the election of a President and Vice President shall be had, or on such other day in each State as may be now by law established for the appointment of Electors or Presidential Electors in such State, and the same day in the whole United States.

SEC. 2. Whenever any State shall by a tribunal or in any manner provided by the laws thereof finally decide and determine any controversy or question which may arise in such State concerning the appointment of Electors or Presidential Electors, such decision and determination shall be conclusive, and the Electors appointed in pursuance thereof shall be received and their votes counted as such Electors, unless the two Houses of Congress shall concurrently decide that such appointment was not made in accordance with the laws of such State as provided for by it, before the time fixed by law for the meeting of Electors.

SEC. 3. That if any State shall have appointed Electors at any election held for the purpose of appointing Electors, and shall fail to appoint Electors on the day prescribed by law for the appointment of Electors, the Electors may be appointed on a subsequent day in such manner as the Legislature of such State may direct.

SEC. 4. That if any State shall provide, by laws enacted prior to the day fixed for the appointment of the Electors, for the final determination of any controversy or question arising touching the appointment of Electors or Presidential Electors, by judicial or other tribunal, or otherwise, and such determination shall have been made in accordance with such laws so provided prior to the day fixed for the appointment of Electors, such determination shall be conclusive, and the Electors appointed in pursuance thereof shall be received and their votes counted as such Electors, unless the two Houses of Congress shall concurrently decide that such appointment was not made in accordance with the laws of such State as provided for by it, before the time fixed by law for the meeting of Electors.

SEC. 5. That the Electors of President and Vice President of each State shall meet and give their votes on the second Monday in January next following their appointment at such place in each State as the Legislature of such State shall direct.

SEC. 6. That if any State shall not provide, by laws enacted prior to the day fixed for the appointment of the Electors, for the final determination of any controversy or question arising as aforesaid, or for the decision of such controversy or question by such tribunal or in such manner as aforesaid, or having provided for such determination, shall fail to make such determination before the time fixed for the meeting of Electors, any two Electors appointed in such State may meet and make such determination, but such determination shall be made before the time fixed for the meeting of the Electors, and shall be final and conclusive, and the votes of Electors appointed in accordance therewith shall be received and counted, and no others.

SEC. 7. That the Electors shall meet and give their votes on the said second Monday in January in the City of Washington, at such place as may be provided by law for the meeting of the Electors of the State of which they shall be Electors, and the Executive authority of each State shall cause three lists of the names of the Electors of such State to be made and certified, and delivered to the Electors on or before the day on which they are required by this act to meet.

SEC. 8. Congress shall be in session on the second Monday in February succeeding every meeting of the Electors. The Senate and House of Representatives shall meet in the hall of the House of Representatives at the hour of one o'clock in the afternoon on that day, and the President of the Senate shall be their presiding officer. Two tellers shall be appointed on the part of the Senate, and two on the part of the House of Representatives, to whom shall be handed, as they are opened by the President of the Senate, all the certificates, and papers purporting to be certificates of the Electoral votes, which certificates and papers shall be opened, presented, and read aloud in the alphabetical order of the States, beginning with the letter A; and said tellers, having then read the same in the presence and hearing of the two Houses, shall make a list of the votes as they shall appear from the said certificates; and the votes having been ascertained and counted as in this section provided, the result of the same shall be delivered to the President of the Senate, who shall thereupon announce the state of the vote, and the name or names of the persons, if any, elected, which announcement shall be deemed a sufficient declaration of the persons elected President and Vice President of the United States, and, together with a list of the votes, be entered on the journals of the two Houses. Upon such reading of any such certificate or paper the President of the Senate shall call for objections, if any. Every objection shall be made in writing, and shall state clearly and concisely, and without argument, the ground thereof, and shall be signed by at least one Senator and one Member of the House of Representatives before the same shall be received. When all objections so made to any vote or paper from a State shall have been received and read, the Senate shall withdraw from the House, and such objections shall be submitted to the Senate for the decision; and the Speaker of the House of Representatives shall in the manner submit such objections to the House for its decision; and no electoral vote or votes from any State which shall have been rejected shall be received except by the affirmative vote of both Houses as provided in this act. No other objection shall be made to the vote of any elector than that he is not eligible to the office of President or Vice President of the United States, or that he is not the person he is alleged to be, or that he is not duly appointed according to the laws of the State from which he is returned, or that he has been appointed, elected, or returned in a manner not authorized by the Constitution and laws of such State.

SEC. 9. That it shall be the duty of the Executive of each State, as soon as practicable after the conclusion of the appointment of the Electors in such State by the final ascertainment, under and in pursuance of the laws thereof, of the controversy and questions, if any, therein, to communicate by and under the seal of such State to the Secretary of State of the United States a certificate of such final ascertainment, specifying the Electors appointed and the manner of their appointment, which certificate shall be received by the Secretary of State, and preserved by him for one year, and shall be produced at any meeting of the Electors when any question shall arise as to the appointment of the Electors of such State, and shall be conclusive evidence, except as hereinafter provided, of the appointment of the Electors therein mentioned; and it shall be the duty of the Secretary of State to keep safely and preserve all certificates which may be received by him under the provisions of this act for the period of one year after the same shall have been received by him, and to deliver the same to the succeeding Secretary of State; and such certificates shall be open to public inspection under such reasonable regulations as may be established by the Secretary of State.

SEC. 10. That if any State shall fail to make, with reference to any election at which Electors for President and Vice President are to be appointed, the ascertainment which by the foregoing provisions of this act is to be made as a final ascertainment of the appointment of Electors, or if any Electors shall meet and give their votes after the time fixed by this act for the meeting of Electors, the two Houses of Congress shall proceed to count the votes of the Electors appointed in such State notwithstanding such failure or refusal.

SEC. 11. That the Senate and House of Representatives shall not proceed to any other business than is necessary for the counting of the votes and declaration of the result of the vote for President and Vice President, until the same shall be completed and the result declared, except that they may proceed at any time after the hour of twelve meridian has arrived to take such recess as may be necessary for refreshment; and no recess shall be taken unless a question shall have arisen in regard to counting any such votes, or otherwise under the Constitution and this act, or in regard to the decision of such question, and except that the two Houses may take recesses from day to day, not extending beyond the hour of four o'clock post meridian of each day, in order to dispose of such questions as may have arisen in regard to the counting of such votes or the decision of such questions.

SEC. 12. That when the two Houses assemble as provided in this act, the President of the Senate shall not entertain any motion or proceeding touching the count of any Electoral vote or votes from any State unless some motion or proceeding in writing shall be made that concerns the vote or votes of that State, and has been submitted to the Senate and House before they proceed to count the vote or votes of that State, and no debate in the Senate or joint meeting shall be allowed on any motion or proceeding touching the vote or votes of any State from which but one return has been received, or from which but one return of its Electors appears to have been regularly issued by the State authority mentioned in Sec. 4 of this act, except that which relates to the counting of votes from a State from which two or more returns or certificates purporting to be returns have been received, and which are mentioned in Sec. 4 of this act, and in such case the debate shall be limited to the question of counting the votes of such State, and to that question only, and each Senator and Member of the House of Representatives may speak to such question once, and for a period not exceeding five minutes, but after such debate shall have been had for the period of two hours, or after such earlier time as a majority of the Senate and House of Representatives shall by concurrent vote direct, the two Houses shall separate and proceed forthwith to vote upon the questions or questions on which debate has been had, and no other question shall be in order, and no question shall be decided affirmatively except by the concurrent vote of the two Houses; but after such debate shall have been had and such vote taken upon any such question arising in the matter of the vote of any State, any Senator or Member of the House of Representatives may speak to such question once, and for a period not exceeding five minutes, and may present any motion or proposition relevant to the question, but not before decided, which shall be decided without debate, and no other motion or proposition shall be received or entertained or considered by the Senate or House of Representatives, or any joint meeting of the Senate and House of Representatives, or any separate meeting of the Senate or House of Representatives, during the pendency of the question of counting the votes of any State, or of any motion or proposition relating thereto, or during the consideration of any question arising thereon, or during the recess allowed for the purpose of enabling the Senate and House of Representatives to meet and proceed with the count of the votes of any State Senator Conkling declares that he will not be a Republican Presidential candidate in 1880. He is in favor of Grant. This leaves the field, at present, with only Grant and Blaine conspicuously mentioned for the race, but with several other good men who may be brought forward hereafter, who have received more or less mention. It is clear that the current of Republican opinion, throughout the party, at the present time, is strong and unmistakable in favor of selecting for President in 1880 a nominee who is conspicuous for the great qualities of political and physical courage, or backbone, and who is noted as a man of strong and decided character and political convictions.

Newman, of Wilson, Emmet co., Michigan, to Julius Pratt, of the State and county aforesaid, dated October 19th, A. D. 1877, and recorded in the office of the Register of Deeds for the County of Charlevoix, and State of Michigan, on the 10th day of November, A. D. 1877, in Liber "Three" of Mortgages, on page 222, which mortgage was assigned by the said Julius Pratt to William B. Sargent, on the 26 day of November, A. D. 1877, and the assignment thereof recorded in the office of the said Register of Deeds of Charlevoix county on the 11th day of November, A. D. 1877, in Liber "Three" of Mortgages, on page 58, on which mortgage there is claimed to be due at the date of this notice the sum of one Hundred and Thirty-nine Dollars and fifty-eight cents, and no attorney's fee of thirty dollars, provided for in said mortgage, and no suit or proceedings at law having been instituted to recover the moneys secured by said mortgage, or any part thereof.

Post & Tribune.
The Metropolitan Republican Journal of Michigan.

The publishers of the Detroit Post and Tribune point to the record of journalistic enterprise and political sagacity made in the last year of the existence of the consolidated newspaper as the satisfactory evidence of the excellence of the claim upon the public confidence and support. The paper will continue to be the sincere, vigorous and able advocate of the Republican political doctrine, of an honest and rational financial and fiscal policy, and of State development.
In the near future, its ample facilities in news-gathering, its wide circulation, and its position as the metropolitan organ of the dominant party in its state enable its publishers to assign no idle promise by further improvement, and to fully meet the expectations of its patrons.
The news department of the Post and Tribune will be kept fresh, accurate and complete; the paper has control of the largest facilities for getting intelligence, foreign, domestic, state and local, and nowhere specially correspondents at all important points in Michigan and at the chief centers of news the world over.
Its compilations of State news and its commercial reports are well known for fairness and reliability.
Its editorial page discusses current issues sanely, and from the standpoint of accurate information, and of an adherence to correct political and economic principles. All signs of special public interest will receive from it the same thorough and painstaking investigation which it has given for years the important phases of the currency question.
Its columns will be rich in miscellaneous reading matter, including sketches, essays, and selections from the current literature of the day. Especial care will be taken to keep the paper pure and elevated in tone.
The page of the Post and Tribune devoted to matter prepared for the rural community, containing discussions of questions of interest in practical agriculture, letters on farm and home topics, etc., etc., etc.
New features will be added to the paper during 1879, and neither pains nor expense will be spared in keeping the Post and Tribune a First-Class Family Paper.
Strong in all its departments, and in every way worthy of the great State with whose history and growth it has been so long and closely identified.

"WHEN will this snow business end?" is the oft-repeated query heard on our streets. Drifts fence high and abandoned sidewalks unite in disgusting everybody, and still the "upper deep" is filled with the feathery element any moment you choose to look out of your window.

AT Roscommon Station, from the 7th to the 14th of December, the carcasses of three hundred and seventy deer were shipped to market by freight and express. Allowing a proportion for home consumption, this shows a slaughter of over four hundred deer within probably not much over one week. At this rate the deer of Michigan must soon become extinct. The Legislature will do well to take our game laws still more stringent, if this noblest of game is to be long preserved in our forests.

The Grand Rapids Board of Education has ordered that the Nursery, a juvenile magazine, be used as a textbook in the primary schools of that city. The design is to furnish fresh reading matter for the children, and the idea is a good one.

DON'T forget those fresh oysters at W. C Newman's. Plenty of nice candies for New Year's eleven.

DURING one day of Mr. Nettleton's visit to Wisconsin, the thermometer stood 22 degrees below zero. The same day here it was 18 degrees above zero.

'Nother Campmeeting ground has been located. This one is on the north shore of Higgin's lake, Kalkaska county, and is owned by the Protestant Methodists.

THE MASQUERADE.—The Masquerade party held on Wednesday evening last under the auspices of the Charlevoix Cornet Band was in all respects one of the most successful affairs ever held in this place. The costumes were many and varied. Upon the floor engaged in the "mazes" could be seen the Deutch Gaulten, and the Carmelite Nun; the Chinaman and the dusky African; the white surpliced clergyman and the striped and spangled circus clown; the Catholic priest and his protestant brother; the feathered knight and the Spanish Don. There were several expensive costumes on the floor.

THE growing importance of Charlevoix as a trading center is attributable more to the business character of its merchants than to any other cause. Charlevoix has a business firm whose remarkable success is due solely to its merits as an enterprising and square dealing business house. Carpenter & Bartholomew have built up a trade here of broad proportions, and are still extending it. They deserve their success. See their new advertisement.

BADLY USED INDIAN.—On Tuesday morning last, at a very early hour, and during the severe storm that prevailed an Indian with pony and "pung" drove down the hill and onto the bridge with the traditional nonchalance of his race. As he occupied the "Canada" end of the bridge the fastenings become loose and the wind swung the bridge upon its pivots holding the discomfited aborigine a lonely captive for a space of two or three hours, exposed to the extreme cold, and the searching wind. His entreries for help finally brought Henry Aldrich to the spot, who managed to get the bridge closed, after considerable exposure to his own person. The Indian after being rescued was found to be badly chilled, and scarcely able to help himself to a house.

TEN years ago this coming spring the firm of A. Buttars & Co., opened the mercantile establishment in this place which bears the firm name of Fox, Rose & Buttars. Mr. Buttars has, during the entire period, been the managing man of the institution, and his business tact and popularity have been a tower of strength to the institution. They carry a large stock of general merchandize and and their large trade increases annually. They have a new advertisement in this issue.

GEN. ALPHEUS L. WILLIAMS, Representative in Congress from the Detroit District in this State, died in Washington Saturday the 21st. Gen. Williams was born in Connecticut, Sept 20th, 1810; graduated from Yale College in 1831; studied law, and removed to Detroit in 1836, where he has since resided. He was Lieut. Col. of the 1st Regt Mich. Vols. in the Mexican war, and was made a Brigadier General by President Lincoln soon after the breaking out of the late rebellion. He was elected to Congress by the Democrats in 1874, and again in 1876. He was a candidate again last fall, but was defeated by John S. Newberry, Republican.

The Boston Traveler says: "One course only remains Let there be a united North. Let there be an exhibition of power. The South represents power and it will represent nothing else. Kindness is wasted upon it."

It is rumored that Hale and Frye, of Maine, and our own Hubbell, are working hard with President Hayes to secure the appointment of old granny Christianey to the German mission. This is to make a place for the election of Zach. Chandler to the Senatorship of Michigan, and we say Amen.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

The sexton of Dagenham Parish, Essex, in England, was buried alive while digging a grave.

A carrier of Lisdoonvarna, County Clare, Ireland, has just met his death in a curious manner. He was riding on a bicycle and was upset. He fell on a chisel and was so badly wounded that he died by the roadside.

An exchange says: "Kind words are better than gold." Well, they may be for some purposes, but, when you want to choke off a bill collector with a heavy under jaw, gold's the best. Such men don't run to sentiment much. —Bridgeport Standard.

A brakeman, the other day, "for the fun of the thing," threw a lump of coal at an Italian image vender's reflection as the train rushed through the Springfield (Mass.) depot, and almost ruined the poor man's stock in trade. The Italian was sharp enough to take the number of the car on which the brakeman was riding, and he reported his grievance to the railroad officers. The matter was investigated, and the brakeman was abruptly discharged.

An eager and unknown young man called upon a clergyman in Warren, R. I., a few days ago, and said he wished him to marry him to a young lady later in the day, and had set his heart upon five dollars as the fee that he should pay for the important service; but, unfortunately, he had but three dollars, and would like to borrow two dollars of the clergyman to put in the envelope with it. The clergyman was worldly wise, and the youth went away without the two dollars. And he did not come back to be married.

Ernest H. Swarz, of West Kansas, died last evening. On Wednesday last he was bitten by a carrion fly on the left corner of the mouth. His blood was poisoned, and a disease known as "charbon" ensued. The theory of the case is that the fly had been sucking the juice of some diseased animal or carrion, and inoculated him with the poison. His face and head swelled to an enormous size, and his face became discolored—black and purple. On Thursday night he became insensible, and last night he died.—Kansas City (Mo.) Times.

Not long since, a widow living in Virginia received $5,500. She took it to a prominent stock broker and asked his opinion as to the best investment for the money. She was told to buy Sierra Nevada, then selling at $950, and Mexican at $80, and still so. Dazzling the decline which followed immediately thereafter she was called upon for more money, but was unable to response. She had, however, some rare diamonds, which she had saved from a high estate maintained by her husband and herself in an early day in prosperity on the Comstock, and these she gave in keeping to the broker, and felt easy. During the last week she was again called on for more margins, and being still unable to comply with the request, was sold out. She had lost her $8,500 and her diamonds, which are now worn by the broker's wife. There is no romance in the foregoing, but rather an instructive story, and but one of many such now existing on the Comstock. —Gold Hill (Nev.) News

Don't Fret or Worry Your Pupils.

Many years ago I left Lake George for Saratoga Springs. There were three heavily-loaded Concord coaches, each drawn by four horses, and the distance to the nearest station on the railroad was about twelve miles. It was my good fortune to secure a seat beside the driver of the leading coach, the other men immediately following us. The coaches were sufficiently near each other to enable me to observe something of the habits of the different drivers. He by whose side I sat was a quiet, kind and gentlemanly man. He used no boisterous words, uttered no oaths, had no slashing of the whip. If any horse was not doing his proper share of the work, he managed to touch him with the whip in such a manner that the other horses of the team neither heard nor felt the blow. So the entire distance was passed over without any shouting, swearing, or whipslashing.

With the other two drivers it was different. They whipped, and shouted, and swore, and their teams were kept constantly annoyed and fretted. The three coaches arrived at the same destination within five minutes of the same time. The horses of the leading coach appeared as fresh and quiet as though they had not traveled a mile. But not so with the others. They came to the end of their route pulling and foaming. The difference was entirely owing to the fact that the leading team was kindly driven, and in no way worried, while the others were whipped, excited and fretted at almost every step.

It occurred to me that there was the same difference in teachers that there was in these drivers. The tasks to be performed may be all the same, but some teachers will secure their performances in that quiet and kindly manner which makes it seem pleasant; while others, by their harshness and rigid exactions and severe words, will continually annoy and worry their pupils, and so make all exercises irksome and unpleasant. The quiet and pleasant way need not be dull and lifeless, but may be equally energetic and effective with the noisy and harsh way, and far more satisfactory to all concerned. The teacher should not be merely a commander and driver, but he should be a kind leader and director, causing his pupils to feel that he is their friend, and making all requirements known in that gentle and winning way which it will be a pleasure to regard and fulfill. And if it shall be necessary to administer reproof or correction, that may be done in that gentle, private and kindly manner which will secure the desired results without awakening unkind or bitter feelings.—National Journal of Education.

Astronomical—1879.

As the coming year will be one of much interest to the amateur, as well as to the professional astronomer, a few words on the principal astronomical events of 1879 may not be uninteresting to many of your readers.

In eclipses, it must be admitted that the year could not well be more devoid of interest. There will be two eclipses of the sun, one on the 22d of January, and the other on the 19th of July, both of which are annular, and neither of which is visible to this country. There will also be a slight eclipse of the moon Dec. 28, a part of which may be seen by the inhabitants of the Pacific Coast.

Vulcan—Too little is known as yet of this planet to hazard any conjectures concerning it. Doubts, indeed, have arisen in some quarters of the correctness of Prof. Watson's observation, as it has been shown that, according to his calculations, the planet should be seen on the face of the sun several times a year. Little doubt, however, is now felt as to the existence of one or more planets within the orbit of Mercury.

Mercury—At the beginning of the year will be in the morning sky, but, owing to its great southern declination, will not be easily seen. It will be visible for a few evenings toward the end of March, somewhat to the north of Venus and lower down. It may also be seen in the morning sky about the 9th of September, but cannot well be seen at any other of its periods of elongation.

Venus—Having passed its superior conjunction with the sun on Dec. 8, 1878, will become visible in the evening sky about the middle of January, and will be in conjunction with Jupiter on the 23d of that month, being about 1 deg. south of the latter at the time of setting, on that evening. The beauty of the scene will be enhanced by the presence of the new moon, which will be in conjunction with both planets on that day. Passing Saturn March 2, Venus will remain in the evening sky until Sept. 23, the date of inferior conjunction with the sun, but will scarcely be seen throughout September, owing to its southern declination, but will be bright in the morning sky during the remainder of the year.

Mars—Will be visible only as a morning star for the first half of the year. It will be in conjunction with Jupiter on the 8th of May and with Saturn on the 30th of June, being within eighty seconds of a degree of that planet. As the conjunction will occur in the afternoon, the two bodies, which would appear to the naked eye as one, will not be seen. Mars will arrive at opposition on the 12th of November, and though not so brilliant as in 1877, will blaze brightly in the evening sky during the latter part of the year, approaching sufficiently near the earth to render its satellites visible—a pamphlet on the motions of which may be obtained on application to the National Observatory.

Jupiter—Will come to opposition on the 21st of August in the constellation of Aquarius, being at its farthest point east nearly in line with the western side of the Square of Pegasus, and about equidistant from Mark α of that constellation and Formalhaut. Being in a region devoid of bright stars, the great splendor of this planet will attract unusual attention.

Saturn—With the exception of the first month, this planet will be in Pisces throughout the year, coming to opposition on the 5th of October, being about two hours east of Jupiter. During the month of March this planet will pass into the Northern Hemisphere, where it has not shone for almost fifteen years, and will be near the equinoctial during the year. The rings of Saturn will not be very "open" this year, and can not well be seen without a good telescope.

Uranus—Will be in Leo, 4 or 5 deg. east of Regulus, during the year. It may be seen without a glass during February, if its exact position is known.

Neptune—Is in Aries, being in opposition on the 3d of November, and in conjunction with Mars, on the 14th of August, being near that planet during the latter part of the year. Neptune shines as a star of the eighth magnitude, and consequently is never seen without the telescope.—Cor. Cincinnati Commercial.

One of the very best preparations for repairing roots that leak is to procure coal tar at the gas works, and mix finely-sifted coal-ashes or road-dust with it till about as thick as mortar. Plaster with this carefully around leaky roof valleys or gutters, or about chimney flashings. It will soon set as hard as stone, and apparently as indestructible. This preparation is very cheap, and would probably answer equally well spread all over a roof previously laid with felt or roofing paper. Once put on properly, it would seem to be there for all time.—Prairie Farmer.

A Good Father.

Dr. Graham having passed a very creditable examination before the Army Medical Board, was commissioned as Assistant Surgeon in the United States Army in 18—, and ordered to report for duty to the commanding officer at Fort McKavett, Texas. There were no railroads in the Western country at that time, and the usual way of getting to Texas was by the Mississippi River to New Orleans, and then crossing the Gulf to stage it up through the State. Dr. Graham was very desirous of examining the Western country mineralogically, so applied and received permission from the War Department to go by way of Arkansas and the Indian Territory, if to his pain.

On his arrival at St. Louis he shipped the greater part of his baggage by way of the river, and taking only what he could carry on horseback, started on his journey. While in St. Louis, at the Planters' Hotel, he formed the acquaintance of a gentleman, who, hearing where he was going, gave him a letter of introduction to his brother, who was a farmer living on his route in Arkansas. It is not necessary for us to follow him on his road, or tell what discoveries he made in the interest of science; sufficient it is that one day, toward dusk, he reached the house of the gentleman to whom he had the letter, and, dismounting, knocked at the door and presented his letter to the Judge (even in those days every one was a Judge in Arkansas), who would not have needed the letter recommending the open-handed welcome he received and pressed on him. Supper was also ready, and news was as much sought after then as now. After a short visit, he proposed to go on to the next town, about four miles off, where he intended to put up for the night. The Judge would not listen to his leaving, and was so cordial in his desire for him to stay that he would have been rude not to have done so. The Judge, after directing one of the servants to attend to his horses, invited him, as the dinner room, where he was introduced to the wife and daughter of his host, and also to a substantial Western supper, to which he did ample justice.

After supper they adjourned to the parlor, and he entertained his newmade friends with the latest news from the outside world. The Judge brewed some said whisky punch, which Graham, socially inclined, imbibed quite freely. The old couple retired, and left their daughter to entertain him; and whether it was the punch or what, at all events he made but love to her, and finally asked her to be his wife and go to Texas with him, to which she consented. She, being very much attached and innocent, took everything he said in downright earnest, and with it, was a case of "love at first sight."

But I am anticipating. During the evening the Judge had come up, and remembered what he had said, and it worried him; but he said to himself, after emptying his water pitcher, "Never mind, I'll make it all right in the morning. I must have made a fool of myself. She's lively, but what are a-moving as show as 'lasses in winter-time."

Things were arranged as the old Judge said. The marriage took place, and the army received its addition to its ladies in the person of the Arkansas Judge's daughter, and Dr. Graham has never regretted the obduracy of his father-in-law, or the unsophisticatedness of his wife.—Harper's Magazine for January.

Reticence.

In the high and difficult art of speaking the truth, silence is to speech what shadow is to light. So to place one's silence as to increase the amount of truth conveyed is as important a part of sincerity as chiaroscuro is of painting. It is not only that silence in many cases bears so obvious an interpretation that it is just as easy and just as dishonest to deny the truth by silence as by words. The importance of discretion in alstaining from words lies in this, that truth requires not merely that what we say or imply shall not be inconsistent with facts. It requires (in its perfection) that the impressions we convey shall correspond with its subject; that the proportions shall be preserved, and the relations with surrounding objects truly indicated. We need not go into thinking of the truth of history. A writer who gives undue prominence to one set of actors, or to one motive in managing, distorts and misleads as surely as he could do by definite inaccuracies of statement, and often in a much more important sense. And so in that conventional presentation of the affairs of a daily life in which we are all engaged, were free from danger and full of duty, were still keeping up the barbarous wake, although the corpse had been placed upon its burial platform in some secluded spot on the prairie, where it is to be hoped the wild flowers and birds will watch over it evermore. Riding out from the dozen or so spaces that comprised the village, Mr. Hoyt and myself made a short cut across a curve in the trail and discovered a dead Indian on a platform of stakes, about ten feet above the prairie. At first, like all whites and here, we set out with the determination, to take what trophies might be on the rack, but upon reading the prayer of his friends, written in English and pinned to one of the stakes that he might not be disturbed, as Yellowface, the dead man, had always helped the white man and was a friend of all who passed that way, we left the grave undisturbed. The Indian had only been there since April, and had his gun, tomahawk, knife and beaded ornaments all upon his person. —Montana Cor. Cleveland Leader.

A Gull Story.

A STRANGE incident occurred on board of the lightship off Leying Pan Shoals. During the prevalence of the severe storm of the 12th of September last, after the darkness of night had set in, rendered doubly gloomy and forbidding by the cawling tempest that thundered through the rigging, broke with furious violence over the staunch vessel and sent the salt spray in phosphorescent clouds over the very mastheads, one of the seamen was hauling his allotted spell at the wheel, and was intently watching the storm as it raged in all its grandeur and sublimity, when a large black bird dashed through the blinding mist and lit upon the railing near where he was standing. He took the bird, which proved to be an ordinary sea-gull, all wet and drabbled by the storm, and warmed and dried it in his bosom, after which he placed it in a little bed improvised for the occasion, after first feeding it, as if it had been a little child. The next morning, the storm having subsided, our seaman turned the bird loose, of course with no expectation of ever seeing it again. Very much to his surprise, however, on the very next night at about the same hour of its previous visit, the gull again put in its appearance, alighting upon the starboard rail as before, when it was fed, caressed and cared for as on the occasion of its first call, and from that time on, for nearly two months, nearly two months, when the latest information was received from the ship, the bird had continued its nightly visits and had become regularly fed and consigned to its "little bed," where it would remain quiet and released the next morning. This is no fancy sketch or draft upon the imagination, but is an "every true tale" from a source entirely reliable and trustworthy.—Wilmington (Del.) Star

A Wedding Mystery Solved.

AN American recently solved a mystery which had confused and amazed a wedding party in Rome. The bride was the daughter of one of the most noble Marquises of old or modern Rome, and the groom was the son of another noble house. When the wedding contract had been signed, the groom took the hand of his young wife in his own and kissed its fingers. She smiled at this, and allowed her hand to rest where he had placed it. But in a moment, in the hearing of the company, a voice was heard, as from her lips, saying: "Impertinent! how dare you touch my hand? Be off, sir!" She then smiled as before, and her lover gazed upon her face in dismay. Suddenly another voice laugh, and it was a dry and ironical laugh that startled more than the words they had heard before. "Has the girl gone mad?" said the groom. The fainting and her friends gathered closely around the sofa on which she had fallen. At this moment a young American described as "of great wealth" came forward, very taciturn and almost timid in manner," offered to examine into the cause of the strange occurrence. See that it is kept in a dry place from the rain and storms.

It was on that she was not pretty and nice; but he thought what a confounded fool she must be not to see that he wanted to get out of it. But it was no use. "I always, young man, give Nell her own way; so it is all right; you need not say a word."

"But I've got to go on to-day."

The old Judge turned his eyes toward him. He had an Arkansas knife in each, and one of those double-barrel shot-gun locks, as he said, "You ain't starving to get out of it, are you?"

The doctor, taking in the situation, said, promptly, all hope being gone, "No, sir."

The Indians and Their Dead.

A GUN, about twelve years old had died, and her relatives had appointed that evening as the beginning of her funeral. After death takes place in an Indian village the weeping and wailing takes place immediately, and continues among the relatives in the wildest and most demonstrative manner for many days. The dress has to be forced and rushed in its highest gloss, the family of the dead girl had given away everything they had possessed, and even dancers engaged in pulling down the very lodge that sheltered them, and cutting the buffalo robes that composed its sides into small pieces, while the mother of the girl had chopped off some of her fingers with a butchers-knife and was being pounded by sympathizing friends to keep from fainting. Everybody had their faces painted black and were moaning as only a grief-stricken Indian can. The wooly and fantastic lodges and weird faces of the Indians, lit up as they were by the flickering glare of a large campfire, formed a picture at once grotesque and startling. When our party visited the camp in the morning, the girl's family were fresh beneath and free of sleep, were still keeping up the barbarous wake, although the corpse had been placed upon its burial platform in some secluded spot on the prairie, where it is to be hoped the wild flowers and birds will watch over it evermore. Some Old-Fashioned Scotch Funerals.

Talking of funerals, in the good old times, and in the mansions of the lairds, these used to be ten days' enjoyable of parochial festivities. The kith and kin came from great distances to be entertained in a style befitting the occasion. There were great faces at the gathering when the guests assembled round the coffin to listen to a suitable prayer. Then glasses of wine were handed round once, twice or oftener—the poorest people would procure wine for the occasion—and "the funeral of the deceased" was toasted, in silence. Then the long procession moved off to the kirkyard, and the body was laid silently in the grave. That duty being solemnly discharged, a load was visibly lifted from the assistants. Acquaintances came together in the carriages and mourning coaches, and there was plenty of animated conversation. When the guests took their seats at the tables in the dining-room all were in excellent spirits and appetite. The near relations might be red at heart, but they felt hospitably bound to stifle their sorrow, and there were ample appliances for drowning it. When the old fashion of drinking healths and "taking wine" prevailed, mourners were apt to get merry in spite of themselves, while, as may be supposed, the more sanguinary acres of the deceased gave themselves over easily to boisterous jovinity. It was a churlish thing to be the first to break up good company, and even the minister might well sit it out till convivial example spurr his decorum.—The Cornhill Magazine.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

The following heavities are mostly taken from the agricultural columns of the Iowa State Register:

It is wholesome to go into farming gradually—not to jump into it.

Attention to stock, like good shelter, saves feed and adds flesh.

No smoking should be allowed about barns—nor any other place.

A lump of rock salt should always be where the cows can have access to it.

The farmer tells the secret of his success thus: "Though a farmer, I could never feel it was right for me to be unmanly."

A good pile of dry wood, cut right for the stove, and piled in some dry place, is a good thing to preserve the peace of the family. Now is the time.

Scaly legs in fowls are caused by a parasitic mite which burrows under the skin of the shank and feet. They may be destroyed by applying a mixture of lard and kerosene oil.

It is said that a small quantity of kassafras bark mixed with dried fruit will keep it free from worms for years. The bark is easily obtainable, and the experiment worth trying.

Mix lightly one pound of Graham flour with a pint of thick, sweet cream; add salt, roll thin and bake as other pastry, and you will have a fine Graham pastry.

Spread out on our wide prairies, barried in business from spring to fall, if the farmer can get a chance to meet the social affections by associations, he loses nearly all there is in life worth living for.

Winter is the time for the limbs and muscles to rest, and for the activity of the brain and intellectual energies. If the farmer neglects these, he is forfeiting his best opportunities and interests.

When seed has been dropped on any article of clothing, apply kerosene to kill the seed; then apply chloroform to restore the color. This process will remove all stains.

Rats and mice will go into a trap much more readily if a small piece of looking-glass be put in any part of the trap where they can see themselves reflected. They mistake the reflection for another rat, and where others go they follow.

Potatoes stored in cellars are in some cases rotting. To check, or prevent this, keep the cellar as cool as possible without freezing. Then scatter quicklime over them. This is of threefold benefit. It keeps them from rotting, makes the cellar sweet and healthy, and disinfects the atmosphere, preserving the family from malarial fevers.

H. W. Ely, of Iowa City, gives this prescription: Take one pack of ashes, four pounds of salt, one pound of black antimony, seven pounds of brimstone, one pound of sulphur, a quart (or one-eighth pound) of saltpeter, pound the ingredients fine and mix well together, and keep them constantly in a trough by it-self. Each hog will eat what he needs of the medicine from day to day. See that it is kept in a dry place from the rain and storms.

Aerial Locomotion.

A citizen of Indianapolis, who has for years made the subject of aerial navigation his special study, has at last perfected a method which he believes, when fully developed, will supply a safe, enjoyable and practicable apparatus for traveling in the air. The model of his invention was shown to a Journal reporter on Saturday and its details explained. The plan is not that of a flying-machine or a balloon with a steerage apparatus, or similar in any respect to the thousand and one experiments that have hitherto been tried and failed. But its leading idea has undoubtedly been suggested by the experiments made during the Franco-Prussian War, and more recently in Paris and London with the captive balloon. A favorite amusement with many persons in those cities who desired to experience the sensation of a balloon voyage without subjecting themselves to its accompanying risks and dangers has been to take an excursion beaneward in the aerial slippers for as the rope would allow and then have it lowered to renew their acquaintanceship with things mundane. But a voyage of that kind was of no practical use, and the project feared.

It only afforded an opportunity for a good bird's-eye view over a vast stretch of country. The idea of the Indianapolis citizen has been to arrange for the use of a balloon, but also, to a certain extent, the means of self-propulsion. It is constructed all the time with the ground over which it travels. His working model shows quite clearly the mechanical apparatus by which he proposes to accomplish this difficult and hitherto impossible task, and he has in preparation a larger model which he expects to have ready for exhibition within a few days, when a detailed description can more properly be given. Meanwhile, he has under the necessary application for a patent, and expects to ask the City Council at an early day for permission to make the necessary preparations for exhibiting an experimental aerial line between the city and the stockyards. He anticipates that the aerial car is to be launched well up from seventy-five to one hundred feet in length and capable of holding more people than an ordinary railroad car. And he sees no reason why the invention may not be made applicable for traversing long distances as well as short routes. In fact, the anticipation is that, sooner or later, the idea he has partially developed will be utilized to the extent of providing aerial transfer across the Continent. —Indianapolis Journal.

Useful If Not New.

The following simple rules for preserving health and promoting comfort, if not new to some of our readers, are none the less important to every one.

The object of brushing the teeth is to remove the decomposing particles of food which, by their decomposition, generate acids, the strongest of these acid resulting from this chemical change is the object of dentifrice. A stiff brush should be used after every meal, and a thread of silk floss or India rubber passed through between the teeth to remove particles of food. Rinse the mouth in lime water neutralize the acid.

Living and sleeping in a room in which fire is kept never rises to a state of suicide. A sun bath is the most refreshing and hie-giving bath that can possibly be taken.

Sleep in loose, but warm and thin woolen cloth. To this end never sit in damp shoes or wear foot coverings so long and pressing closely.

The best time to eat fruit is half an hour before breakfast.

A cold bath should not be taken less than three hours after a meal. Never drink cold water before bathing. Do not take a cold bath when tired.

Sleep in bed of pure hard starch on the washboard; and, after washing, rub a pinch over the hands. It will prevent chapping.

If feeling cold before going to bed, exercise; do not roast over a fire.—Scientific American.

Never Return.

It is said that one out of every four real estate sales we go to Denver, Colo., to secure health, never return to the East or Europe as a rule. The undertakers, next to the hotel keepers, have the most profitable business. The excessive mortality may be overrated and paradoxical and could only be cured by a residence there, but the facts will but use the Bitters in time. This we know. See other columns.

The U. S. Signal Service.

Gradually, but surely and irresistible forces of Nature are, through science, made of use to man. Following in the wake of the ingenious inventions for the use of steam and electricity, comes the organization of the U. S. Signal Service. Is it not wonderful that a system could be established and perfected whereby an operator can accurately predict the weather of a distant locality? And yet the science proves our "Storm Guide" to be reliable. Equally great are the advances made in the science of medicine. Were it not for certainties and doubts now confided to absolute certainty. The discoveries of Hartes and Parker have been succeeded by the Golden Medical Discovery of Dr. R. V. Pierce. No longer need people despair because some physician has pronounced the lungs unsound. Hundreds of testimonials are on file in the office of Dr. Pierce from those who had abandoned all hope and had been given up to die by physicians and friends. Inflient consumption, bronchitis, and scrofulous tumors, speedily, surely, and permanently, yield to the healing, invigorating properties of the Discovery. If the bowels be constipated, use Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. For full particulars see Pierce's Memorandum Book, given away by all druggists.

No organ of thoughtful action can be employed without the assistance of the blood, and accordingly can be supplied safely or with impunity without a supply of healthy blood. With healthy blood the exercise organs necessarily developed, whether they be muscular or intellectual. By the use of Fellows' Compound Syrup of Hypophosphites the blood is speedily vitalized and purified, and so made capable of producing a sound mind and a sound body.

PUBLIC NOTICE.

I, LEN HANNAS, being a Hermaphrodite by trade, and a woman of the town by profession, do hereby give notice to the public that I could work 22 hrs a day at my profession. This includes 6 to 8 male companions per day. I am also prepared to do any kind of work in my profession at reasonable prices. It was on one of these occasions that I contracted the wonderful effects of Hop Bitters, as the thousands do daily.

I had a defect in one of my fingers, which were bent of usual size in my hand in such a manner, by the constant use of the cunt, that they were very much in the way in my daily avocations. I could not handle my tools as I wished, and often thought I would have my fingers cut off to get them out of the way. I used everything that offered, any hope of relief, but all to no avail, until, as I was working with Hop Bitters in the forge, and of course could not prevent its coming in contact with my hands.

I took no notice of the effect it had produced, until one day, wishing to use a heavy hammer, I grasped with my crooked hand, and much to my surprise I found my hand of its own accord, straight, and I had as much use of them as ever. I could hardly believe my eyes. I thought I was dreaming. I used Hop Bitters internally and have been appointed by the Golden Medical Discovery of Dr. R. V. Pierce. No longer need people despair because some physician has pronounced the lungs unsound. Hundreds of testimonials are on file in the office of Dr. Pierce from those who had abandoned all hope and had been given up to die by physicians and friends. Inflient consumption, bronchitis, and scrofulous tumors, speedily, surely, and permanently, yield to the healing, invigorating properties of the Discovery. If the bowels be constipated, use Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets. For full particulars see Pierce's Memorandum Book, given away by all druggists.

Never Return.

It is said that one out of every four real estate sales we go to Denver, Colo., to secure health, never return to the East or Europe as a rule. The undertakers, next to the hotel keepers, have the most profitable business. The excessive mortality may be overrated and paradoxical and could only be cured by a residence there, but the facts will but use the Bitters in time. This we know. See other columns.

The U. S. Signal Service.

Gradually, but surely and irresistible forces of Nature are, through science, made of use to man. Following in the wake of the ingenious inventions for the use of steam and electricity, comes the organization of the U. S. Signal Service. Is it not wonderful that a system could be established and perfected whereby an operator can accurately predict the weather of a distant locality? And yet the science proves our "Storm Guide" to be reliable. Equally great are the advances made in the science of medicine. Were it not for certainties and doubts now confided to absolute certainty. The discoveries of Hartes and Parker have been succeeded by the Golden Medical Discovery of Dr. R. V. Pierce. No longer need people despair because some physician has pronounced the lungs unsound. Hundreds of testimonials are on file in the office of Dr. Pierce from those who had abandoned all hope and had been given up to die by physicians and friends. FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Dec. 26, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

The year just drawing to a close will be memorable, even if for no other reason on account of the remarkable agitation of the sugar question which has been in progress for many months, and is now at its height. Through recent developments the subject has been forced upon the whole public, and has become of such immediate personal interest to every consumer of the article named, that I propose to devote this letter to its consideration. This whole agitation has grown out of what I may call a blow in the dark at the sugar refining interest of this country, an industry the magnitude and importance of which will probably surprise most of your readers when I give, a little further on, some of the statistics regarding it. For months past successive articles have appeared in several of the city newspapers about refined sugars. They were mysterious productions. Nobody wrote them, and they mentioned no names, but they were all of one drift. They hinted darkly at a horrible state of things among the refiners; at gigantic and systematic frauds on the revenue, and a terrible conspiracy to destroy the American nation by means of insidious poisons introduced as adulterations into almost all the sugar sold in this market. At first these oracular utterances produced little effect. Those who understood the subject smiled as they read them, and the rest of the town paid them only a momentary attention. But they were continued, and at length, as they were copied more or less through the country, the result sought by the ambushed Unknown began to show itself in scattering expressions of public alarm. The ball thus set rolling has gone on, as such balls are apt to do, growing in size and momentum until, as I am credibly informed, the consumption of refined sugar has fallen off nearly one-half.

The sugar refining houses in this country are not very numerous, perhaps fifteen or twenty in number, but they employ a capital aggregation some fifty millions of dollars, refine about one billion six hundred million pounds of sugar a year, and furnish the means of subsistence, directly and indirectly, to at least one hundred and fifty thousand people. They buy and use in a year thirty million pounds of bone-back, three hundred thousand tons of coal, thirty thousand car loads of barrel staves, eighteen thousand kegs of nails, and other materials in proportionate quantities. They have in the last ten years introduced improvements into the processes amounting almost to a revolution of the business, and have made American refined sugars cheaper and better, grade for grade, than any others in the world. The question then naturally arises, who can desire the ruin of such an American industry, and what is their object in seeking it? An interesting column might be written in answering that query, but I must confine myself to a much briefer reply.

Most of the raw sugar used in our refineries comes from Cuba. The duties in the present tariff, although large, (amounting to $35,000,000 a year,) are practically ad valorem, and under them the refiner is able to import and work up the lower grades which furnish the various moist yellow sugars—seven to eight cents a pound—which from the bulk of our domestic consumption in these economical times. A change in the tariff, substituting for the flexible ad valorem scale a uniform specific duty on all these low grades of raw sugar, would instantly stop their importation, reduce our refinery interest to the condition of the stranded hulk of a noble vessel, and transfer nearly the whole of its business to Cuban hands. Does not this fact furnish motive enough for the attack? But who is there who would make such an attack and for such a purpose? In view of what I have just said, who indeed, unless it be the Cuban, themselves? But again, how could a Cuban or any number of Cubans have the effrontery to hope for success in asking the Congress of the United States to practically crush out and industry standing sixth in importance in the American list, and to put up the price of one of the common necessaries of life, all for the benefit of a Spanish colony? Of course they could not, were they to appear in person and avow their object. Then how can their agency in this serious agitation be shown? That might have been a difficult question months ago, but it is not so much so now.

About the time of the first appearance of the newspaper articles above referred to, the same doleful tale of fraud and adulteration was poured into the ear of Congress, together with an application for just the change of tariff which I above described. The whole matter was referred to the Committee of Ways and Means, a sub-committee of investigation from which sat in this city in September, and heard considerable testimony, including that of the Appraiser of the Port, several refiners and others. Out of all the witnesses examined, just three stated upon the truth of the charges. Two of these, Messrs. Fuller and Hewett, were particularly bitter and emphatic in their denunciation of the sugar refiners, and the former sought to give extra weight to his invective by stating his own business to be refining. In the course of the examination, however, it came out that Mr. Fuller had been entirely out of that branch of the business for nearly two years, and that he and his ally are junior partners in the large Cuban sugar-houses of Aldama & Fuller and Ceballos & Co., respectively. The third of the accusing trio, a gentleman for many years generally respected in New York City, had, indeed, been a sugar refiner, but had made a disastrous failure only a few months previous, and his virulent and incoherent speech before the committee was so wild as to indicate an intellect unsettled by misfortune. It is more than probable that the gentlemen named have been among the most prominent in causing this present state of things. The application to Congress and the testimony just referred to, point plainly to that conclusion, and when, some little time ago, I asked an acquaintance, who is on the editorial staff of an influential daily in which several articles against the refiners appeared, how his paper came to publish such stuff, he replied that he didn't know much about it himself, but believed the information was furnished by a man named Fuller. The whole movement is simply an attempt to use an American cat's-paw to pull Cuban chestnuts out of the fire. If further proof of this assertion is desired, it may be found in the following extract from an address recently delivered by a member of the largest wholesale grocery house in America:

"I might mention in this connection that when I was in Liverpool recently a friend of mine in the sugar trade there mentioned to me that he understood from Cuban sources that our tariff would undoubted be altered to a specific tariff on sugar this winter, which would give great advantage to refiners of sugar in Cuba; that he had been solicited to take an interest in sugar manufacture there on that ground. At that time I paid little attention to the subject. I had not heard of the violent agitations of the matter on this side of the water. On my arrival home, however, I put the two things together, and the result to me is somewhat significant."

I have devoted so much of my letter to exposing the sources and motives of the stories which have so alarmed the people, believing this to be the shortest and surest method of breaking their force, and reassuring any of your readers who may have been affected by them. The charges as I mentioned at the outset, are fraud on the Government, and adulteration, but it is the latter only of which I intended to speak particularly. It is my firm belief that both are practically groundless. There may be some spark of fire under this great volume of smoke in regard to undervaluations in importing, in which the fraud is alleged to consist; but the charge of adulteration is simply false—a story trumped up for the purpose of setting public opinion against the refiners, and thus facilitating the passage of the Cuban job through Congress. The only substances, so far as I know, which the refiners are accused of putting into their sugars are plaster of Paris, grape sugar, and some mineral containing tin, though the writers of the mysterious article usually prefer more dangerous sounding names, and call the plaster "gypsum," the grape sugar "glucose," and speak of the "chloride" or "muriate" of tin as frequently as possible. Some one has lately said that the public is so like a great baby, in the case with which it can be frightened, that were some one to come forward and proclaim in a solemn voice that the bakers were putting carbonic acid in their bread, many people would be almost scared to death; and without intending the slightest disrespect to that portion of the public which forms your constituency, I must say that I endorse his remark. If anybody fears that his sugar contains plaster, he can very easily settle the question by dissolving a spoonful of it in a glass of water, and seeing if a white sediment remains undissolved. No less an authority than Prof. Chandler, president of the Board of Health of this city, states that he has tested samples of refined sugar bought at a number of retail groceries without finding a particle of this mineral, or of any other adulteration. The "glucose" scare is simply absurd. This substance occurs naturally in all cane-juice, and in boiling down the latter great care has to be taken not to produce it in large quantities. It is perfectly harmless, and is eaten or drunk by all of us almost every day of our lives. It is, however, less sweet than cane sugar, and every difficult to crystallize. A refiner would be very foolish to use it, not because it is hurtful, but because it render his sugars inferior, in appearance and flavor. As to the use of tin in this connection, one fact is sufficient to send that fable into the dust-heap along with the others, and this is that any form of the mineral which has been alluded to by the alarmists, costs nearly twice as much per pound as the best sugar.

When I add that all the reputable refiners in the city have given the most unequivocal denial in general and in particular to these charges of adulteration, I think I have said enough to convince any reasonable man that he may continue to enjoy the sweets of life without fear of being turned into a plaster image, acquiring a tin-lined stomach, or falling a victim to the fell destroyer—glucose.

RADIX.

Personal and Political.

P. T. Barnum is working for the next Senatorship from Connecticut, and claims, as always, to have a better show than anybody else.

The Council Bluffs Nonpariel says the Blaine movement is booming in Iowa, and that the Republicans of that State thoroughly endorse his speech.

Victoria objected to Louise's coming to Canada with Lorne, but the good woman insisted that her place was with her husband.

Vice President Wheeler is commended for the quiet, firm, courteous and dignified manner in which he enforces the rules of the Senate.

A former tutor of the Marquis of Lorne says there is not a more industrious woman in England than the Princess Louise.

Col. Bob Ingersoll and Postmaster Key had a significant political interview the other day. According to the Memphis Herald, they were discussing whether a hog that grunts and squeals will fatten as rapidly as one that feeds in quiet.

Five editors will decorate the next Illinois legislature.

The Washington Post says "Blaine and Edmunds have to count noses now before they start a political debate in the Senate." The inference is, that if red noses predominate the debate is postponed.

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, if you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Cheuter, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

General News Summary.

FORTY-FIFTH CONGRESS—SECOND SESSION.

THE Senate, on the 17th, insisted upon its amendments to the Military Academy Appropriation bill, and a Conference Committee was appointed. The Senator and Diplomatic Appropriation bill was amended and passed. A favorable report was made on the bill to count the bills of settlers on the Des Moines River lands in Iowa. Mr. Blaine's resolution regarding the Constitutional rights of citizens who have taken up, and, after debate, the amendment authorizing the committee to visit any portion of the country where such visit may in their judgment facilitate the object of the inquiry, was agreed to. Senator Wilson's motion to reconsider the amendment was laid on the table, and the Deficiency bill was then passed. Among the bills introduced were: By Senator Thurman, to provide for the payment of the claims of Ohio for keeping United States military prisoners. A similar motion was received and referred from Secy Sherman, in answer to a resolution of enquiry, stating that there were no balances on hand on accounts standing to the credit of the United States in any of the National Banks from March, 1876, to Jan. 1878. Adjourned to Jan. 7.

IN the House, bills were passed: Removing the political disabilities of certain persons. Senate bill authorizing the payment of the bills of Pensioners for keeping United States military prisoners. A similar motion was received and referred from Secy Sherman, in answer to a resolution of enquiry, stating that there were no balances on hand on accounts standing to the credit of the United States in any of the National Banks from March, 1876, to Jan. 1878. Adjourned to Jan. 7.

DOMESTIC.

A FIRE in the business center of St. Louis, Mo., on the night of the 17th, destroyed property valued at $250,000. Among the sufferers were Jaward & Co., jewelers, Powell & Co., carpet dealers, and Alexander, druggist.

ON being informed, on the 18th, that gold had grain opened at par with greenbacks in New York, Secy Sherman remarked to a newspaper correspondent that this was as he expected, and said he did not believe gold would again be above par with the amount of gold on hand and the near approach of the time for paying it out, and he thought it impossible for a premium, however small, to exist. He thought that within a short time greenbacks would be at a very slight premium above gold, owing to their greater convenience.

THE banking-house of C. F. Adae & Co., at Cincinnati, Ohio, suspended, on the 18th. Liabilities, $750,000. The depositors were principally Germans.

SEC'Y SHERMAN has issued a call for $10,000,000, being the rest and residue of the bonds outstanding under the act of March 3, 1865, consols of 1865, not included in former calls.

PATRICK ROURKE and his family of five children were burned to death in the City of Cohoes, N. Y., on the night of the 18th.

CRYSTAL WEDDING.—Much to our regret, a previous engagement prevented its from participating in the crystal wedding of Mr. and Mrs Jackson Ingalls, at Petoskey, on Wednesday evening last. A PLEASANT CAPTIVITY.—That good and ill sometimes travel in the same vehicle, and eat with the same spoon, we can testify with uplifted hand. The editor and his wife, and Archie Buttars and his sister were on New Year's day the guests of F. J. Meech and lady, of Norwood. New Year's day however, to our party, lasted from Wednesday morning until Saturday morning. The elements, in connection with the snow drifts, held us prisoners; but were ever prisoners so happy situated, or so humanely treated. Our host and hostess, and family consisting of Miss Avery, Miss Meech, the venerable Dr. Chamberlain and his lady, are the best combination of the elements of joyousness that we were ever thrown among. Every cloud that settled down over the heads of the prisoners was promptly punctured and dispelled by some one of these friends. We actually caught ourself hoping for a snow storm every time we should visit Norwood. The party returned home Saturday, the coldest possible moment, experiencing great difficulty in reaching Charlevoix even as soon as that.

W. Crouter's Drug Store.

We shall not take home with the dread of Supervisors on any section of that body, on any of the matters of contention. But rather we commend their good traits and personal virtues. We some time ago dubbed one of the county registrars the "orator of the Board." We meant it. His flights of eloquence were sublimely grand. His logic was profound; his gestures Websterian. His arrival in town was always heralded as an auspicious event. As he walked down the street admiring citizens would say, "There goes the orator." At each successive meeting of the Board the speeches of the "orator" were increased in number and intensified in pertinency. At the session just closed, the "orator" rose to the zenith of his fame. The words which fell from his lips were like shrapnels from the muzzle of a thirty-two pounder. That he was the facile princeps of the Board was as certain as that the devil was once an angel. Milton says Satan made a fool of himself, and so did our friend. All orators must have something to talk about, and so Charlevoix and her virtuous denizens was the lofty mark at which he aimed his pop gun. The SENTINEL, with an unfeigned desire to help along an aspiring genius, called him an oyster. It was a mistake. We had the wrong mule by the ears. Our readers have heard of the Hindoo of tradition, who, having lost his donkey, went out in the dusk to search for him. Discerning the form of an animal, he seized it and lest it captive to his enclosure. The light revealed a lion, which from sheer astonishment had suffered himself to be captured. By reversing the order of beasts, our position is illustrated. We went out to capture a lion, and instead of the mane we found the ears. We shall be more careful in the future.

IMPORTANT TRANSACTION.—To-day, Orvis D. Wood, of Norwood, formally closed a bargain with W. C. Newman, of this place, for fifteen acres of land and five lots on the terrace on the south side of Charlevoix harbor. The price paid was $500. Mr. Wood bought this property with a view of making a home in Charlevoix, and will, at an early day erect a residence overlooking the village, at a cost from $3,500 to $5,000. Mr. Wood has long been looking about for a suitable location upon which to settle down in Charlevoix. He has thoroughly weighed the advantages of other points, and their future prospects, and with the clear prophetic vision for which he is noted, he selected Charlevoix as the most desirable and the most promising point in the region. We have interviewed Mr. Wood, and find that he makes this investment in full confidence in all that is claimed for Charlevoix, its present or future. We are sure Mr. Wood will make a valuable acquisition to our thriving and progressive town. May many more like him follow.

THE BOARD OF SUPERVISORS organized Wednesday, but have lengthened their session until Monday waiting for members who were unable to get here owing to the storm.

Very little business was transacted. The salaries of county officers were reduced twenty five per cent.

A resolution was introduced to submit to the people at the next spring election, the matter of the removal of the county seat to the head of Pine Lake, and, not receiving the necessary two-thirds vote was lost. The following was the vote:

Ayes—Weeden, Robinson, Ackerson, Haney, Hicks, Darrah, Niles—7.

Nays—Green, Smith, Ward, Weaver, Wood, Kent—6.

The official proceedings will appear next week.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

Two residents of Hillsville, Va., recently disputed about a young lady's age—one holding that she was twenty, the other that she was eighteen—and fought about it, one being killed.

At Murphy, N. C., the other day, Wesley Thompson and Henry Palmer got into a dispute over a game of drawpoker. Thompson charged his antagonist with cheating. He denied it, and Thompson shot and killed him.

Charles Roble died at Franklin, N. C., a few days ago, and while his body lay unburied in the house, Charles Bourman, a step-son of the deceased, without the slightest provocation, shot and killed his step-brother in the adjoining room to that in which the body of Roble was laid out.

A cat that kills rattlesnakes is owned by Charles Baker, a Granger, who is reclaiming desert land on Dry Gila, opposite Mohawk. The cat watches them until they uncoil and start to glide off; then jumps and catches them by the back of the neck, chewing the vertebræ till the snakes are dead, and with his claws tearing loose any coils that may be thrown around his body. He has already killed several.—Arizona Sentinel.

A curious Connecticut accident: Mrs. Gilbert Cravens, of South Killingly, fell down her cellar stairs with a kettle of hot water in her hand, a step giving way, and was badly bruised and scalded. S. W. Frantzius, a neighbor, heard her cries, and, going to her assistance, tumbled through the break and was scalded. Mr. Frantzius, hearing, to cap the climax, Mrs. Graves' son, aged eleven, came to the rescue, and was soon lamenting with the others on the cellar bottom.

Pat Shannou, a Pittsburgh engineer, was at work at his engine in one of the mills in that city a few days ago. A belt in the gearing over his head was loose, and while putting it on a pulley he was caught by the coat-sleeve. The pulley was making 240 revolutions per minute, and in a twinkling his body was wrapped around the shaft. The sawy beam work above the shafting caught the body and mangled it frightfully. The machinery had to be reversed to get out the head and trunk. The shoes and one foot were thrown 400 feet from where the accident occurred.

At Paterson, N. J., the other afternoon, a man and boy attempted to drive a wagon along the Little Falls turnpike, which was submerged by the freshet. They missed the road and drove into the channel of the river, above Passaic Falls. The wagon-body, with the man and boy, floated off. The swift current bore them toward the rapids and the plunge of seventy feet beyond. Some gentlemen who were on the bridge that spans the river just above the boiling rapids, hastily tore the reins from some horse standing there and made lines, which the man and boy caught as they passed under, and were saved. The wagon-body plunged over the falls.

A few mornings ago, in Grammar school No. 10, in New York City, containing 1,310 children, a dance of fire shot up through the heating register in one of the rooms. The teacher, with great presence of mind, closed the register to keep out the blaze, sent hastily word to the Principal, and quieted the children by telling them a story. The bell was instantly struck which called all the pupils into line in each room. A second stroke brought the classes separately marshalled into the main room, and a third stroke started them all into the street, where, ignorant, and inclined to be jolly as the prospect of an unexpected holiday, the rooms were cleared without any sign of hurry or confusion within two minutes of the first alarm. The children gave three cheers as they emerged into the area, and did not guess the cause of their sudden dismissal until, upon reaching the street, they saw the firemen's helmets.

A Sioux Wedding.

The Hon. G. F. Blanchard, who recently exchanged the care and worry of calling the Nebraska State Senate to order for the less prominent but more lucrative position of Indian Trader, was sitting in the office of his store, an afternoon or so ago, when Ben Terbille, the agency butcher, entered, and after a few preliminaries told Mr. Blanchard that a wedding was to take place at his tepee that evening, and that the happy couple would consider it a great favor if, following the ceremony, they might use that room for a reception and dance.

"Certainly," said the rather astonished merchant, "but who are to be married, and who is there out in the country to dance waltzes and such things?"

"Well," responded Ben, "the bride's Weah-wash-tay, or The Pretty Woman, a grand-daughter of Smoke, who was King of the whole Dakota Nation fifteen years or so ago, and the groom's one of the white employes here. As for the dancing that'll be all right."

"But," queried Mr. Blanchard, "are these folks to be married in Indian fashion?"

"Oh, no. Dr. Irwin's going to hitch them in first-class double harness according to the statute in that case made and provided, and by the authority vested in me and all that sort of thing, you know. Oh, you bet it's all solid clear through."

Very well. You may tell your friend that the office is at his disposal."

At seven that evening the ceremony took place, and White-wash-tay, who once was figured white women's clothes, demeaned herself as modestly and appropriately as any of her fairer sisters under like conditions. Her hair was done in a French twist and neatly banded with a crimson ribbon, which contrasted well with her ringlets of glossy black. Her features were purely Indian, but of a type which warranted her name, and her great dark eyes glanced about on the assembled guests with just enough of trustfulness to them to suggest a measure of maidenly hesitation. Her dress and shawl were not only neat but in good style, and the little feet which peeped out beneath were encased in bootees that might have vied in size with the glass slipper of Cinderella. As for the groom, he was in the ordinary dress an American citizen wears when got up for a special event. After the ceremony, Mashpeah Leutah, known to the whites as Red Cloud, Chief of the Ogalallas, who was present as representative of the bride's family and Nation, arose, and with a native grace and solemnity which impressed all present, raised his hands toward the still and starry heavens and prayed the Great Spirit that he would look down upon the Indian girl and her husband in kindness and not in anger; that he would help them to follow the good way in this world, and after life was over bring them to a place of rest and peace in the eternal hereafter. He then enjoined upon the pair the duty of being good to each other, kind to their friends and helpful to the poor.

In the meantime the mirth had begun in the low log room "up town," on an unrefined platform against the wall sat the musicians, Curtis, Dr. Irwin's colored cook, with the guitar; a wandering bull-whacker with the violin and one of O'Beirne's mechanics with a piccolo. The fun ceased for a moment when the bridal party entered, and then went on with greater zest than ever. Not a white woman was present, the female dancers being half or full-blood Ogalallas. Yet the pulsing rhythm of music never met with better response from flying feet, and the daughters of the prairie endowed the poetry of motion with an accuracy and zest often foreign to it.

As the music rose and fell to the good old strains of the Virginia reel, Dr. Irwin turned to the Times Commissioner and said:

"Do you know I regard this scene as a flattering comment on my administration. Three years back and you couldn't have found one of these women in white costume, and, as for pianos or music, they knew none outside those of the scalp-dance and that of the tom-tom. Now, you see them as self-possessed as though they were paler skins, and had known the ways of civilization all their lives long."

At this moment there came a fall, the couples on the floor took seats, and Gen. Hammond, turning to Mr. Jordan, the chief clerk, remarked:

"I wish, Charley, as those fellows play so well, you'd see if they can't give us a march between dances."

The request was conveyed to the motley orchestra, and after a whispered consultation they began. As the weird, beautiful, perfect harmony filled every nook of this far-off spot the General stared, and then turning to the writer whispered:

"In the name of enchantment, don't you recognize that music?"

"Yes, it's the grand march from Norma, isn't it?"

"Of course; but who would ever have dreamed of hearing it here?"

The air reached and charmed the ears of the Indians clustered about like siren strains, and they drew sensibly nearer to catch every note, until with a flash that was wonderful in its melody, the sound ceased and wandered off through the night to woo the distant pines.—Ogalalla (I. T.) Cor. Chicago Times.

Elephant Herds.

Herds of elephants usually consist of from thirty to fifty individuals, but much larger numbers, even one hundred, are by no means uncommon. When large herds are in localities where fodder is not very plentiful, they divide into parties of from ten to twenty; these remain separate, though within two or three miles of each other. But they all take part in any common movement, such as a march in another district of forest. The different parties keep themselves informed at all times of each other's whereabouts, chiefly by their fine sense of smell. I have observed that tame elephants can scent wild ones at a distance of three miles when the wind is favorable. Each herd of elephants is a family in which the animals are nearly allied to each other. Though the different herds do not intermix, escaped tame female elephants, or young males, appear to find no difficulty in obtaining admittance to herds.

In a herd of elephants the females with their calves form the advanced guard, while the tuskers follow leisurely behind, as the unencumbered tusks are have no one to see to but themselves. I have never known a case of a tusker undertaking to cover the retreat of a herd. A herd is invariably led by a female—never a male—and the females with young ones are at all times dangerous if intruded upon. The necessity for the convenience of the mothers of the herd regulating its movement is evident, as they must accommodate the length and time of their marches, and the localities in which they rest or feed at different hours, to the requirements of their young ones; consequently the guidance of a tusker would not suit them.

Elephant make use of a great variety of sounds in communicating with each other, and in expressing their wants and feelings. Some are uttered by the trunk, some by the throat. The conjunctures in which either means of expression is employed cannot be strictly classified—as fear, pleasure, want and other emotions are sometimes indicated by the trunk, sometimes by the throat. An elephant rushing upon an assailant trumpets shrilly with fury; but if enraged by wounds or other causes, and brooding by itself, it expresses its anger by a continued hoarse grunbling from the throat. Fear is similarly expressed by a shrill, brassy trumpet, or by a roar from the lungs; pleasure by a continued low squashing through the trunk, or an almost inaudible purring sound from the throat. Want—as a calf calling its mother—is chiefly expressed by the throat. A peculiar sound is made use of by elephants to express dislike or apprehension, and at the same time to intimidate, as when the cause of alarm has not been clearly ascertained, and the animals wish to deter an intruder. It is produced by rapping the end of the trunk smartly on the ground, a current of air, hitherto retained, being sharply emitted through the trunk, as from a valve, at the moment of impact. The sound made resembles that of a large sheet of tin rapidly doubled.

While in open country the herds move about a good deal during the day in cloudy, showery weather. In hot, stormy and inclement days they keep to shadow cover, which is close and warm. During breaks when the sun shines for a few hours, they come out eagerly to warm their huge bodies. They often stand for hours together in sheet-rock so common in the Mysore country above hill ranges. The young calves stand between mothers, in small groups, half dozing as they bask; from tranquil family pictures at such times. Elephants are partial to rocky places at all seasons.

While marching from one track of forest to another, elephants travel in strict Indian file. They seldom run more than one or two days at the same resting-place, as the fodder becomes exhausted. They rest during the middle hours of the night, as well as during the day. Somelie down, and they usually dispose themselves in small, distinct parties, of animals which seem to have an affection for each other. (Tame elephants frequently display a particular liking for one or other of their fellows.) About three o'clock they rise to feed or march, and by ten o'clock in the day they are again collected, and rest till afternoon; a clearing at night they again rest. In showery and weather elephants are frequently on the move all day long.

When a calf is born, the herd remains with its mother two days; the calf is then capable of marching, and at this tender age calves are no encumbrance to the herd's movement; the young animals and cows, assisted by their dams. In swimming rivers calves are supported by their mothers' trunks, and held in front of them. When they are a few months old they scramble onto their mother's shoulders, helping themselves by holding on with their legs; they soon learn to swim by themselves if necessary.

Full-grown elephants swim perhaps better than any other land animals. A batch of seventy-nine that I dispatched from Bengal to Barrackpur, near Calcutta, in November, 1875, had the barges and several of its large tidal branches to cross. In the longest swim they were six hours without touching the bottom; after a rest in a sand-bank they completed the swim in three more; none was lost. I have heard of more remarkable swims than this.—G. P. Sanderson's "Thirteen Years Among the Wild Beasts of India."

Judicial Decision of Bets.

A Colorado Court, in the case of Eldred against Malloy, decided that a promise to pay a sum of money, upon the condition that a railroad should be built to a place named on or before a specified day, is void as a wager. The Court says: "The courts of this Territory have enough to do without devoting their time to the solution of questions arising out of idle bets made on dog and cock fights, horse races, the speed of ox trains, the construction of railroads, the number on a dice or the character of a card that may be turned up. If we enter upon the work of settling bets made by gamblers in one case, especially on the time when the Colorado Central Railroad reaches Golden, or when it will reach George's town, we may well despair of ever finding time for the despatch of those weightier matters which affect the personal and property rights of the respectable people in this Territory. If the gate is once opened for this kind of litigation, it is more than probable that we may be overrun with questions arising out of bets. The spirit of our laws discountenances gambling. Penalties are prescribed against gaming, and I can see no difference in principle in the bet that the faro dealer will turn up a jack the next turn and the bet that the railroad will be built to Treble Mountain in so many days."

"FATHER," said an inquisitive boy, "what is meant by close relations?" "Close relations, my son," replied the father, "are relations that never give you a cent." The boy said the old man, then, was the "closest" relation he'd got.

MORE LIGHT.

THE crisp leaves, wetted by the rain,
Are loosened easily,
And with a breath they seem full fain
To drop off from the tree;
Thus in the wind's soft arms they lie,
As if they were well pleased to die.

And as I gaze up through the trees
That shed my coloring in,
Whose foliage thins, with each light breeze,
Lets every hour more thin,
Fresh light, from sky unseen till now,
Falls like a blessing on my brow.

And in the forest, o'er the field,
Gray bowlders, mossy green,
And wrestling weed-paths are revealed
Which were before unseen,
With upland slopes and carved glades,
Once hid by summer's leafy shades.

Those comfort me with promises sweet,
That say my life, perhaps,
As fall youth's warm hopes all my fleet,
And chilling years advance—
The storm-made gaps the bear-washed space,
Will only bower right give place.

Light to discern what lay hid veiled
With leaves of rose and gold,
That glad fruitfulness for which I've pailed
And despised in fleshly cold—
More of the Spirit, eternal Rock,
That stedfast stands earth's rudest shock.

More of the ways, unseen before,
By which God leads on all
To walk with Him, and incomplete o'er
Earth's pleasures dead and gone;
And see, with heaven-illumined eyes,
The glorious sides of Paradise.

Iron-Shod.

THE safety of a mountain climber depends upon being well shod. Therefore the swing-guides were heavy shoes with sharp spikes in the soles.

On a bright July morning a famous scientific party, consisting with two gentlemen to ascend the Piz Mortertasch, a steep and lofty snow mountain in Switzerland.

Though experienced mountaineers, they took with them Jenni, the boldest guide in that district. After reaching the summit of the Mortertasch, they started back, and soon arrived at a steep slope covered with thin snow. They were accustomed to snow-and-ice rope, which was tied to each man's waist.

"Keep carefully in my steps, gentlemen," said Jenni, "for a false step here might start the snow and send us down in a avalanche."

He had scarcely spoken when the whole field of snow began to slide down the icy-mountain side, carrying with it unfortunate climbers in a terrible pace. A steeper slope was before them, and at the end of it a precipice! The three gentlemen were almost hurled in the whirling snow. Below them were the jaws of death. Everything depended upon getting a foothold.

Jenni shouted loudly. "Halt, halt!" and with desperate energy drove his iron-nailed boots into the firm ice beneath the moving snow.

Within a few rods of the precipice, Jenni got a hold with his feet, and was able to bring the party up all standing, but two precipices more would have swept them into the chasm.

This hairbreadth escape shows the value of being well shod. In dangerous places, especially the young. No boy is prepared for rough climbing, unless he is well-shod with Christian principles. Sometimes temptation lies the track under him, and then he must plant his foot down with an iron heel, or he is gone.

A poor boy of my acquaintance signed a pledge never to taste liquor. One day his rich employer invited him to dinner. There was wine on the table, but the lad was not ashamed to say:

"No, I thank you, sir. I never touch it!"

Then came on a rich pudding, which the boy tasted, and found that there was brandy in it; so he quietly laid the tasted morsel back on his plate. The employer discovered that the boy had "pluck" enough to stand by his convictions, and he will never be ashamed to trust him. He is a sure-footed boy. God knows what steep places he before us. He has provided the "shoes of iron and brass" for us to put on. They are truth, and honesty, and faith, and courage, and prayer.

A clear conscience will keep the head cool. And up along the hard road there is a sign-board on which is written in large, bright letters, "He that walketh uprightly, walketh surely."—Rev. Theodore L. Cuyler.

Of Avoiding Rash Judgment.

TURN thine eyes unto thyself, and beware thou judge not the deeds of other men. In judging of others a man laboreth in vain, often erreth and easily sinneth; but in judging and examining himself, he always laboreth faithfully.

We often judge of things according as we fancy them; for private affection bereaves us easily of a right judgment.

If God were always the pure object of our desire, we should not be so easily troubled, through the repugnance of our carnal mind.

But oftentimes something lurketh within, or else occurreth from without, which draweth us after it.

Many secretly seek themselves in what they do, and know it not.

They seem also to live in good peace of mind, when things are done according to the will and opinion; but if things happen otherwise than they desire, they are straightway moved and much vexed.

An old custom is hardly broken, and no man is willing to be led further than himself can see.

If thou dost more rely upon thine own reason or industry, than upon that power which brings thee under the obedience of Jesus Christ, it will be long before thou becomest illuminated; for God will have us perfectly subject unto Him, that, being inflamed with His love, we may transcend the narrow limits of human reason.—Thomas a' Kempis.

Conscience Void of Offense.

"Herein do I exercise myself, to have always conscience void of offense toward God and to wardmen."—Acts xxiv. 16.

WHAT is conscience? The Indicator of our doings; the tablet on which are writ all our deeds, good and bad. We find a good conscience spoken of seven or eight times in the New Testament. In this portion of the Acts Paul speaks of "a conscience void of offense toward God, and toward men." Let us see if we can understand what the apostle means.

The conscience that God has given us is the guide of our lives when it is "void of offense." Paul meant that he always acted so that his conscience approved of what he did. "Void of offense"—that which is offensive, or that might cause another to stumble. He kept his conscience so pure and enlightened in regard to duty, that he acted in accordance to its dictates, and his conduct was not displeasing to God nor injurious to men. "Toward God" can be endeavored to discharge all the duties of public and private worship, did constantly what God required, believing all He use said, and doing all that He approves.

Let me try and show you what I mean by acting so that the conscience approves.

There was a lad in Ireland who worked at a linen manufactory, and one day a piece of cloth was wanted to be cut out that was to be four yards shorter than it ought to be. The master thought it might be made the proper length by a little stretching. He unrolled the cloth, and, taking one end himself, told the boy to take the other. "Pull, Adam, pull," said the master. The master pulled with all his might, but the boy stood still. "Pull, Adam, pull," said his master again. "I can't," said the boy. "Why not?" said the master, "Because it's wrong," said the boy, and he refused to pull. His master disregarded him. That boy became Dr. Adam Clarke. His conscience approved of what he did. It was the purity of his conscience that enabled him so to act.

Could we, in as simple a thing as that, act as he did?

Paul says, "Herein do I exercise myself, to have always a conscience void of offense toward God and toward men." But how toward men? What does it matter to our fellow-creatures whether we have a conscience void of offense or not? Having it toward men is endeavoring to meet all the demands of justice and love; to promote their happiness, knowledge and salvation so that we may look back on our lives with the reflection that we have done our duty, so that we may have nothing to reproach ourselves for, nothing of this kind to make a death-bed miserable.

Now how had Paul come to speak with such certainty about this matter? Because, in his own life, he had found, through constant study and practice, that he could, trusting in God, so act as not to have an accusing conscience.—Cor. Israel New Yorker.

What "Bosh" Means.

In a lecture on Jerusalem at the Wesley Methodist Episcopal Church, in Attorney street, last evening, the Rev. Dr. J. F. Newman, ex-pastor to ex-President Grant, traced the history of that city from the date of the earliest Biblical records to the present time, and told how his appearance when he visited it a few years ago compared with what he might have expected from his Scriptural reading. He said that many of the old landmarks still remained and some of the old customs are still in vogue. One evening, while strolling about, he met a strange-looking procession, headed by a band of unschooled musicians. At the end of the line a group of men were carrying on their shoulders a rude bower, in which a maiden of thirteen, deeply veiled, reclined. "What is this?" he asked of his guide. "It is half of a marriage procession," was the response, "and if you come here at midnight you will see the bridegroom." And sure enough—"Lo, at midnight, the bridegroom cometh"—no cause, a youth of fourteen. The bride was waiting for him, still veiled, at his father's house. He had never seen her face, the marriage having been arranged by a mutual friend. He raised the veil and exclaimed, "Yes, thank God," and his friends went home rejoicing. Had he meant "no" he would have said "Bosh!" and his friends would have gone home sad. The future of Jerusalem thrilled Dr. Newman to think of, for he had no doubt the Jews would become united there as the grandest commonwealth that the world ever saw. Already a Jew—Rothschild—owned the Holy Land.—N. Y. World.

Schoolroom Headaches.

MANY people who have public school teachers among their acquaintance are firmly of the opinion that the schoolroom has a headache system all its own, and their impression would be strengthened if they were to interview boys and girls. There is nothing strange about the complaint; the only wonder is that it is not continuous and that anybody escapes it. With systems of heating and ventilation that are almost uniformly defective, and, worse yet, under the control of janitors who have no knowledge whatever of these departments of their business, and who are as apt as any other men to neglect or despise whatever they do not understand, many of our schoolrooms are boxes almost hermetically sealed, into which hot air is being driven and compressed. The heat is frequently intolerable, the expired breath and other physical emanations of the children pollute the air to a degree extremely dangerous to health, so teachers and children, who, at nine o'clock entered the room in fair health and spirits, emerge at noon with listless step, aching head and deranged vital organs. Should a janitor's nature protest against breathing in a pure and sweltering air, he goes a window, and straightway all the ventilation in the immediate vicinity are chilled and impoverished by the draught. Authorities are largely referred from one danger only to submit to another. The condition of the air of schoolrooms is no secret to Boards of Education; it has been the subject of some statistics, by experts, which forcibly suggest the Black Hole of Calcutta; but what is or has been done to remedy it? How many teachers are compelled to use such ventilating facilities as their rooms possess? Their own frequent headaches and those of the helpless children show that the number is very great, and the direful effects indicate that but few janitors need fear to compare their records with that of the late lamented King Herod. —N. Y. Herald.

The Oldest Obelisk.

NEXT after the greatest, it may be in order to notice the oldest of the existing obelisks. This is the one cleared by the modern Village of Matareah, or the site of Heliopolis, in the land of Goshen, near Cairo. A single perpendicular line of hieroglyphics ornament each side, and records its erection by Osirtasen I., probably about B. C. 3,000. The inscription, with one slight exception, is the same on all sides. A myriad of wasps' nests now completely obscure the carvings on two of the surfaces. Authorities differ regarding its height, but sixty-eight feet two inches is given as the latest measurement by Mariette Bey. Nearly six feet of the length is buried in the accumulation of centuries, which has raised the stone, even at the surface of the ground, presents sad evidences of the lamentable haste or reprehensible visits of the water. The opposite sides are equal, the measurements at the base being six feet one inch and six feet three inches. Piocche gives six feet and six feet four inches as his finding in the same connection. The southern side of the shaft is the best preserved, while the western is in the worst condition on account of having sealed to a height of about fifteen feet. The obelisk is supposed to have stood at the entrance to the great Temple of the Sun, where Moses studied theology. Remnants of the temenos, or inclosure, in 1875, are all that remain.—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Winter Feeding of Cows.

DURING summer, when the herbage is fresh and abundant, cows make their own milk. All that is required then is to see that their grass is abundant and their water is sure. In the winter season it is the owner's skill, more than anything else, that makes the milk. To keep a cow in full flow through the winter is a matter of difficulty to the most skillful dairyman. But it can be done if the means are at hand and the methods followed. The first requisite is a warm stable, in which there is abundant ventilation, and where perfect cleanliness can be observed, for comfort is as necessary to cattle as feed or water. The skin of the cow should also be kept clean, and well carded or brushed, for the healthful action of the skin is necessary for health and healthful secretions. Then the feed should be nutritious, easily digestible, and abundant. Hay is the principal winter fodder for cows, and early-cut clover mixed with "meadow-grass," chiefly what is known as June grass, or Kentucky blue grass, with some red-top, is the best for product of milk. Timothy and orchard grass cut if cut young and from good stiff sticky sown and well manured, will make good hay for milch cows. Well-cured corn-fodder is but little inferior to the best hays; and the writer has found that sweet-corn fodder, sown in drills three feet apart, and with stalks six inches apart, grown to maturity, and carefully cured, will make more milk than an equal weight of fairclover and timothy hay. The concentrated food supplied is of more importance than the coarse fodder, and it is here that mistakes are often made. Corn-meal alone is too rich in carbonaceous matters to produce milk; food that is richer in albumens than this is necessary. Corn, oats and rye bran, in equal weights, ground together, furnish a perfect food that is rich in phosphates, albumen and fat-forming substances, and thus produce a good flow of milk rich in cream. Buckwheat bran stimulates the secretion of milk greatly, but this food, being deficient in fat and starch, produces a poor quality of thin milk. Wheat middlings and bran, also, have a tendency to reduce the yield of milk, at least that is the result of a continuous trial of this food for a whole month. Brewers' grains are a nutritious food that helps greatly to increase the flow of milk, and if cornmeal is added the quality of the milk is also improved. The oil-cakes are rich in both albumen and oil, but few dairymen care to use these, because of the peculiar flavor which they impart to the milk. Potatoes, when chopped and mixed with meat, add to the yield of milk, and the quality produced by them is good, as might be expected from the large proportion of starch they contain. Turnips should be avoided as food for milking cows, as the cautious use of them required interference greatly with the routine of the feeding, and makes much trouble. Pumpkins are a rich food and impart a good color to the cream; but the seed should be removed before they are fed to the cows, because of their diuretic effects. Apples are justly esteemed by dairymen, excepting in very small quantities of the sweet varieties, and even then it is a question if it would not be better to cart them to the manure heap or to the cider mill rather than give them to cows. The best-cleaned roots should be fed in moderate quantities, and at four separate feeds. If a large quantity of food is crowded into the stomach, the digestive organs become unnaturally taxed, and the ease and comfort of the cow is interfered with. Two meals of cut feed, with hay, suffice for a moderately well-filled stomach, and although the cow's paunch is capacious, it will not do to stuff it by fodder, or half a bushel of moist feed or roots, at once, as it reaches the lungs.

"AH, by George!" groaned young Mr. Lethered, sinking wearily into an office-chair, "ah, by George! my head aches fearfully." "Possible?" asked his employer, old Mr. Hardfax, with a look of curious interest and sympathy. "Possible? Something must have got into it." And then for a long time nobody said anything, and the room seemed to grow about fifteen degrees colder.—Buck-Eye.

"THE LITTLE NEWSBOY" is the title of a new song and refrain, issued in aid of the newsboys of Chicago, written by Mrs. V. J. Keat, and music by J. Martin Towne. It has a most attractive and characteristic title-page, which, with the genuine merit of the words and music, ought to bring a large return in aid of the little "Arabs." To the charitably-disposed, it will doubly repay the investment. Price, 35 cents, postpaid. Address, Newsboys' Home, 146 and 148 Quincy st., Chicago.

HOME, FARM AND GARDEN.

Every farm should own a good farmer.

—Oranges and lemons keep best when wrapped close in soft paper and laid in a drawer.

—Recollect that unskilled treatment of dumb animals is as likely to kill as to save their lives.

—Boiled onions are prescribed in England for a cold in the chest, and raw onions, either cooked or raw, for chronic rheumatism.

—Celery Salt.—Save the root of the celery plant, dry and grate it, mixing it with one-third as much salt. Keep in a bottle well corked, and it is delicious for soups, oysters, gravies, or hashes.

—Intelligent farming is learning to adapt methods to conditions and circumstances. There are fixed principles that apply to each condition. The farmer who masters principles can become a master in practice. Modify all principles according to location and surroundings.—Iowa State Register.

—Quite a number of horses have been poisoned in Kansas by being fed raw castor beans, as they are ten times more poisonous than the oil, because by pressing out the latter most of the acrid substances contained in the seed remain in the oil-cake. A few ounces of raw beans, or castor-bean oil cake will produce a fatal diarrhœa in an animal.—Drovers' Journal.

—In some of the foreign exchanges we find the following recipe for preservaing rats: It consists of a mixture of two parts of well-bruised common squills and three parts of finely-chopped bacon made into a stiff mass with as much meal as may be required, and then baked into small cakes; these are put down for the rats to eat, and are said to effect their complete extirpation.—N. Y. Times.

—The following cure for a felon has been tested by wide experience among my friends, and is worthy of circulation: Roast or bake thoroughly a large onion; mix the soft, inner pulp with two heaping tablespoonfuls of table salt, and apply the mixture to the affected part as a poultice, keeping the parts well covered. Make fresh applications at least twice a day, morning and evening, and a cure will follow in at least a week.—Cor. Chicago Evening Journal.

Winter Ruhs.

Never lean with the back upon anything that is cold.

Never begin a journey until the breakfast has been eaten.

Never take warm drinks and then immediately go out in the cold air.

Keep the back—especially between the shoulder-blades—well covered; also the chest well protected.

In sleeping in a cold room, establish the habit of breathing through the nose, and never with the mouth open.

Never go to bed with cold or damp feet; always change them by a fire ten or fifteen minutes before going to bed.

Never omit regular bathing, for unless the skin is in an active condition, the cold will close the pores and favor congestion or other diseases.

After exercise of any kind, never ride in an open carriage and bear the window of a car, for a moment. It is dangerous to health, and even to life.

When insane, speak as little as possible mill it is reserved from, else the voice may be permanently lost, or difficulties of the throat be produced.

Merely warm the back by a fire, and never continue keeping the back exposed to heat after it has become comfortably warm. To do otherwise is debilitating.

When going from a warm atmosphere into a colder one, keep the mouth closed, so that the air may be warmed by its passage through the nose, ere it reaches the lungs.

Never stand still in cold weather, especially after having taken a slight degree of exercise; and always avoid standing upon snow, ice, or where the person is exposed to a cold wind.—Albany (N. Y.) Argus.

Bushmen.

Their speech is a series of clicks, interspersed here and there by a harsh-sounding and utterly unintelligible guttural. In default of better food, the Bushmen will eat snakes and other reptiles, and they make a kind of bread of dried locusts, pounding them between stones, and kneading into cakes the mealy substance thus produced. Although these diminutive savages present one of the lowest forms of humanity—the South American Brotocods being, perhaps, yet a degree nearer to the animal type—they are possessed of a good deal of cunning, and even bravery of a certain sort. Thus, they will not only stalk game of the smaller kinds, but even the lion itself, keeping carefully to leeward, so that their scent shall be unperceived, and, creeping upon their bellies to within a few yards of him, when they will let fly one of their tiny poisoned arrows, and the doom of the king of beasts is sealed! In hunting the ostrich, they contrive to get sufficiently near it under cover of a screen made of the skin and feathers of the same bird, which they advance by degrees, moving the head or neck cleverly, in imitation of one of them feeding. The Bushmen are a very revengeful little people, and think nothing of ham-stringing a whole herd of cattle in retaliation for a real or imaginary grievance, and on account of their deadly, although insignificant-looking weapons, the Boers are much afraid of them, and shoot them down like dogs when they get the opportunity. And yet it seems as if it ought not to be an absolutely impossible to civilize these strange creatures, who are clearly not devoid of intelligence, their cave dwellings being constantly found adorned with spirited drawings of the animals of the veld, traced with some kinds of colored clays and red pigments that seem to defy the effects of time.—Spectator.

"When woolens are worn threadbare, as is often the case in the elbows, cuffs, sleeves, etc., of men's coats, the coats must be soaked in cold water for half an hour; then take out of the water and put on a board, and the threadbare parts of the cloth rubbed with a half-worn butter's-tread," filled with flocks, or with a prickly thistle, until a sufficient nap is raised. When this is done, hang the coat up to dry, and with a hard brush lay the nap the right way.—N. Y. Paper.

It a good man dies a natural death he is not likely to be remembered as a hero. Let him be murdered by Indians and the conditions are changed.—N. O. Picayune.

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Dec. 27, 1878.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

This is holiday week; not only the calendar, but by a thousand other and equally convincing tokens. The world is involved in a different atmosphere, for these few closing days of the year, from that which ordinarily encompasses it; and a wonderful atmosphere it is it may be cold, or wet, or bright, or dark, but as it still quivering with the pulsations of the wings of a host unnumbered as the heavenly host" and with the echoes of their first and matchless Christmas song. Frosty as it is, what strange and penetrating vitality is in it! It throws great, glorious Christmas trees into more than summer bloom, its jovial blasts force upon the doors of churches, houses, and hearts. It may freeze water, but thaws the blood. More wonderful than all, it can work itself down into the most tightly-buttoned pockets, and heat the coin so hot that it burns its way out. It is the very reverse of the ill wind that blows nobody good; for it bears up Santa Claus—that jolly old almoner—in his aerial flights, drops fuel and food on to the hovel's door-step, coolly drinks down the mansion's chimney, and good cheer all along the route. It is so full of moral oxygen that it sets people a-bowing, smiling, shaking hands, and slapping each other on the back, like so much laughing gas. It—it well, I wish you and your readers a merry Christmas and a happy New-Year.

Gold has given it up at last, and comes down to earth again. For half a generation it has been a proud mineral, disdaining to associate with anybody outside a small coterie of bankers, or to do any harder work than lying in state in safes and vaults. It has, so to speak, been ballooning so long that it hated to give up the aristocratic recreation and come down to biz. But the balloon sprung a small leak even before the war ended, and, in spite of all effort, has been slowly sinking ever since. It touched ground some days ago, and thought it has bounded feebly several times since, after the manner of balloons, it is now being made fast, and the sybarite gold, reluctant to leave his long vacation, is rolling up his sleeves preparatory to going to work

And speaking of resumption reminds me to relieve you and your readers from anxiety you must have felt as to how you should be able to carry around your wealth when metallic money is again current. The Government has just finished the plates of the new $5,000 and $10,000 notes, which will be at once put with the otherwise necessary wheelbarrow, and be able to carry all the pocket-money we need in a little roll of these bills, hardly bigger than your fist?

Another preparation for resumption has just been discovered in this city by the police, who traced a young man named Tyce to a tenement-house in Thirteenth Street, and forcing their way into his room, found him busily employed in quietly and unostentatiously "making money." He had plaster molds and a kettle of melted white metal, and was grinding out quarters, dimes, and half-dimes at the rate of about $50 per day. It seemed cruel to interrupt these vigorous preparations for resumption, but the officers took him, and Mr. Tyce will turn his talents to serving the State for some years to come.

"There is a reaper whose name is Death," according to the old poem, and for a sickle he uses a great variety of instrumentalities. Of all these weapons, Disease is his favorite; but when this fails to accomplish his purpose, the fell destroyer has recourse to fire arms, paving stones, boiler explosions, and even bakers' wagons. It was this latter agency which enabled him of the skull and cross bones to gain to victory, an old colored woman who for four years more than a century had defied his every effort. Mrs. Thompson was born on Long Island two years before the Declaration of Independence. New York and even Massachusetts were slaveholding States at that time, so that she was born a slave and remained such until a knight errant appeared to burst her bonds in the person of a young negro who, having fallen in love with her, labored patiently till he had saved money enough to purchase her freedom and his own, when he married her.

For more than half a century Mrs Thompson lived in this city, a humble, but worthy member of the community, and at the time of the accident which resulted in her death, was possessed of a degree of health and strength that entitled her to at least a dozen years more of active life. Curiously enough, on the day of this centenarian's funeral, the death was reported of another one, a woman just one hundred years old

Paul Boyton, the adventurous swimmer, whose exploits are known to the world, arrived here the other night, after an absence of three years in Europe. During that time comparatively little has been heard from Captain Boyton, but he has been by no means idle. He has made many exciting and perilous voyages, among them being trips down the Danube, the Po, the Arno, the Tiber, the Rhone, the Loire, the Tagus, the Garonne, and the Seine. The voyage down the Tagus extended over eight hundred miles, through a wild and practically unexplored country. Besides these feats, he has crossed the Straits of Messina, the Straits of Gibraltar and other comparatively wide arms of the sea. As might be expected, he has in these voyages met some exciting and thrilling adventures. The narrative of these and of the receptions given to the fearless swimmer by various crowned heads, forms a highly interesting narrative.

The pedestrian mania is our sporting disease just now. O'Leary and Campana are taking in an unprecedentedly large amount of gate money at the Hippodrome where they are completing a six days' march; and a "Madame" Anderson is doing a proportionately driving business over in Brooklyn, where she is attempting to do some unreasonable number of quarter-miles in an equally absurd number of quarter-hours. The newspaper offices gravely hang out bulletins at various times during the day to satisfy an impatient public as to the condition of these human kittens who, with equal gravity, continue the long and profitable chase of their own tails.

With the holidays come the oranges, and as this season has been an exceptional one, it is estimated that in the month ending with New Years' 50,000 000 oranges will be sold in this city. Already the fruit departments of Fulton and Washington markets are glutted, and by one steamer due in port today 300,000 oranges, by another 3,000 barrels, or 1,000,000 oranges, and by another 850,000 in bulk are expected. The barrel stock, nearly all of which comes from the West Indies, and the case and box stock, mainly from Mediterranean ports, are consigned to shipping and commission houses, by whom they will be distributed among the trade. The stock in bulk, however, partly from the West Indies and partly Florida, is sold in quantities from one barrel to 1,000 barrels at the docks.

The importation of this fruit is a terrible precarious business. To say that the fruit is perishable, as the term is usually understood, is an inadequate expression of the extent of that risk, there is no product so perishable. Of about two hundred million oranges received here last season—from September until March—nearly eighty-three millions perished.

RADIX.

To the Four Winds.

Five weeping children were left orphans the other day by the death of their mother, a widow who lived on Prospect street, says the Detroit Free Press. The father was killed at one of the depots apout two years ago, and since then the mother has kept the family together by hard day's work. Lack of food, exposure and worry brought on an illness which terminated fatally, and the children huddled together in a corner of a room feeling awed and frightened, but yet unable to realize that death had made them waifs. When her remains had been sent away to the Potter's field a dozen women gathered and held a whispered conversation.

"I'll take one of the poor things, though I've four children of my own," said one of the women.

"And I'll take another."

"And so will I!"

Then there was the baby—a toddling boy, who had been rocked to sleep every night of his life, and whose big blue eyes were full of tears as he shrank behind his sister to escape observation. As none of the poor women seemed prepared to take so young a child, a girl not over 10 years old, dressed a little better than other children there, crept into the group, reached out for the baby, patted his white head, kissed him, and said:

"I will take this one! I have no brother, and ma and pa will let me keep him. He can sleep in my trundle-bed, play with my doll, and they may put all the Christmas presents into his stocking!" and the girl ran around the corner and returned with her mother, who assented all she had said. "Come, bubby —you're mine now!" called the girl, and he laughed as she put her arms around him and tried to lift him up.

By and by a woman said: "Children, you have neither father, mother nor home. You must be divided up or go to the Poor House. Kiss each other, and remember that you are brother and sister!"

They put their arms around him, and hugged and kissed him, and they went out from the old house to go in different directions and perhaps never again to meet all together

Personal and Political.

People who think Kentucky is some on the kill don't read the Texas papers. We absolutely get ashamed of ourselves when we read the bloody specials to the Galveston News.—Louisville Courier Journal.

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia and disordered liver The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence and depriving it of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, if you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Cheuren, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

FIRES.

Kindred to the subject of insurance is the great destruction of property annually by fire. Some idea of this may be obtained from the fact that the fire insurance companies alone have paid out over $(SIXMILLION) for losses in Michigan within the last eight years.

According to the most reliable data accessible, there were during the year 1877 in this country and Canada, 10,400 fires, or about twenty every fifty minutes The value of property destroyed by these fires amounted to nearly one hundred millions of dollars Of that sum $48,500,000 was paid by the insurance companies, and the remainder of the loss was sustained by property owners. The entire sum, however, was a total loss to the wealth of the country. The State of Michigan suffered losses by fire in 1877 of over $3,000 000 about one half of which fell upon the insurance companies.

The balance, $1,500,000 may fairly be considered as the net loss to this State each year by fire. Many of these fires may attributed indirectly to the entire absence or non enforcement of building laws, and directly to defective construction All of avoidable incendiary causes are eliminated, the criminal records affirm that a vast number are annually spent in the burning of property. This class of fire may be set down as the work of the pyromaniac, or in force a sale to insurance companies of overinsured property. The prejudice against arson as a crime in view of the desirability of saving the wealth of the State and suppressing fires.

Within the last eight years, it appears, from the official records of several States, that 1,000 persons have been convicted of arson in this State, for the commission of which crime only seventy-two were sentenced to the State prison. Of these, still more charged with the crime of arson, but only twenty-two were convicted and punished. It would seem that the laws are inadequate for the punishment of this crime, or that they are not apparent that there is any lack of zeal on the part of prosecuting officers. Some more stringent measures are made suggest whether the requirement of unanimity in juries and the power to compel local officers, under the cause of the fire, extent of the loss and probable origin, would be found to tend to constitute a more effective remedy against this.

LIBRARY.

The bound and unbound books on the shelves of the Library number about 31,000 volumes, of those some 3,000 have been obtained within the past two years through legislative grants and donation. The law department of the Library contains the largest and best collection of law books in the State, having the statutes of every State complete and the English books are The Librarian points out the appropriation of $5,000 for the next two years for the purchases in books.

I think an appropriation almost as large should be made for the purchase of books, and that provision should be made for additional help, as the present facilities will not suffice. I would also suggest the propriety of having the Librarian keep an account of loss or damaged books, as well as having the pecuniary taken yearly.

QUARANTINE AND HEALTH BOARDS.

The board for the supervision of charitable institutions has steadily pursued the work, and I refer you to its report for many excellent suggestions in regard to our system of charities and corrections.

The reports of the board of health have attracted attention and rendered valuable service in regard to the prevention of disease. It is to be regretted that a law defining the powers, duties and publication of the vital statistics. It would be much better than now, much shorter where brief enough even after they are taken.

THE RAILROAD STRIKE AND THE MILITARY.

In July, 1877, a spirit of violence and disorder was manifested in some portions of the country which resulted in serious disturbance, with the destruction of many lives and millions of property. Combinations were formed, railroads and passenger trains compelled to stop their trains, and a large part of the carrying business of the country for the time being suspended.

Having reliable information to the effect that a mob was threatening the peace and good order of this State, I deemed it my duty to take such energetic measures to meet such emergency should it arise. I accordingly ordered a large force of the militia to be prepared for service, and with them provided for the disbursement of such sums as might be necessary to support the same. The establishing peace and the supremacy of the laws. The force was to be composed of companies organized in the several counties by the commanding officers, and consisting of such number as in view of the desirability of saving the wealth of the State and suppressing fires.

SUPPLEMENT.

MICHIGAN.

Gov. Croswell's Message to the Legislature.

Satisfactory Condition of the State Finances.

A Good Word for the Marquette & Mackinac Railway.

Interesting and Valuable Statistical Information.

Both houses being in joint session, on the 2d, Gov. Croswell read the following message:

GENTLEMEN OF THE SENATE AND OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

In accordance with the requirements of the Constitution I have the first legislature to meet with, and to address, the people of the State since the completion of this building for their use and enjoyment. It marks the transformation which has been wrought in the material and political condition. It bespeaks the growth of population, the increase of wealth, the advancement of science and art from the time of the establishment of the territorial government of this important country, costing, all furnished, one and a half millions of dollars. As we assemble in the room for which it was constructed, let us hope that the counsels and legislation to be held here may contribute to the general welfare, and be instrumental in promoting and perpetuating the blessings of liberty and peace.

In the blessings vouchsafed just passed, general health has prevailed throughout our borders. The earth has produced bountifully, and the harvests have been abundant. We have grown in the State, within the past year, more than 28,000,000 bushels of wheat, and other cereals and fruits in proportion. In the same time we have produced 1,500,000 barrels of salt, 1,125,000 tons of iron ore, and copper, gold, silver and slate in very large amounts, of which I have not full statistics before me. The production of lake copper, in 1877, was 19,286 tons.

FINANCES.

The Treasury presents a satisfactory condition. The cash on hand Sept. 30, 1876, was $1,004,-166.30. The receipts from all sources for the two years ending Sept. 30, 1878, aggregate $4,191,-239.21. The total expenditures for the same period amount to $4,188,404.10. The balance in the Treasury on the 30th inst. was $1,007,001.35. No part of this balance belongs to the general fund, which has been overdrawn to the sum of $173,011 11.

The bonded debt of the State on Sept. 30, 1876, was $1,392,143.07. The policy of extinguishing this debt as rapidly as possible has been steadily pursued and I am gratified to inform you that in the two years ending on the 30th inst. there was paid in the sum of $451,000, leaving the total amount of bonds now outstanding against the State $650,143.07. Of the bonds this paid $50,000 were issued in aid of railroads, and a portion of $14,143.07 was for saving to the State in interest the sum of $1,000, leaving the net reduction of principal $435,000.

It will be a cheering to know that the bonded debt of the State is rapidly decreasing, and although the rate of the sinking fund was somewhat increased by the last legislature, I would recommend an increase to the rate of one hundred thousand dollars per annum, believing that the indebtedness to the trust fund has been for years past unduly neglected.

It should also be remembered that the present financial prosperity does not merely rest upon large accumulations of the public moneys. The sum of $1,007,001.35 is available and applicable to the payment in cash of existing liabilities, and will remain so after the payment of the liabilities which we cannot well have at present time thereafter, except in the ordinary expenses of the administration.

The next consideration arises in connection with the fact that many of our municipalities are carrying a heavy burden of debt. What policy, if any, should institute to avoid such schemes for additional taxation and debt hereafter?

REGIMENTAL DISCIPLINE AND ENCAMPMENTS.

It is a question for you to decide whether, through the State officers or in any other manner results of value can be secured to the local bodies of the counties, cities, towns, villages and districts of the State, for the large sum of money annual each year to such localities for the maintenance of local and regimental organizations. The encampments of the past have been productive of good results, but I am not satisfied that the expenditure of the same sum with the same amount of time imposed thereon, would not accomplish more for the benefit of the service than now is or is soon to be realized. I would suggest that the encampments be discontinued for the present, and that the money thus saved be turned into the military fund, to be expended by the several organizations for the purchase of arms, uniforms, and such other equipments as they may require, and for the payment of the expenses of the officers and men in attending the meetings of their respective boards of inspection. I would also recommend that the inspection of arms, uniforms and equipments be made by the commanding officers of companies, regiments, brigades and divisions, and that the inspection be made annually, and at the time of the annual meeting of the Fashionable Furs.

The choice of furs becomes, from winter to winter, a more difficult matter. Almost every kind of fur is now imitated, seal-skin even not excepted. Furriers now dye many real furs, to make them blacker and more glossy; so it is by no means easy to distinguish the real articles from the imitation. The length of the hair is a very good indication of the quality of the fur, the long-haired fur being the best. In Paris, but most fashionable furs this year are black and dark shades. Among the ordinary kinds of black fur are the "chinchilette" and "Siberienne," and when these come beaver and skunk. After the black furs is the mountain-rat, which is not dyed, but, being a common skin, is only used for ordinary dresses and travelling suits. Gilded, silver and blue fox are much in favor as ever. These furs are only suitable for velvet and satin garments. They are also much used for lining evening garments and opera-cloaks. White hare, swan and ermine, which are not much used for lining purposes, are reserved exclusively for children's suits and garments. Chinchilla, though not fashionable, is always worn. "Grebe" is a kind of feather trimming, although it is classed among furs. It is principally used for young girls' suits. "Thibet" fur, in its natural color, has a silvery shade, and is dyed to great advantage for bonnets. Seal-skin, this winter, is so much, if not more, worn than ever. It is considered the most stylish of all furs, and is worn by gentlemen as well as ladies. Coats, vests, caps and trimmings are made of this fur. Ladies' seal-skin garments are very long. Young ladies wear half tight-fitting seal-skin paletots, with the Persian cap to match. Confections trimmed with bands of seal-skin are very handsome, especially when the material is satin or "gros de Suez" in the same shade as the fur.

A new suit for a royal wedding, just made in this combination, is as follows: The body is of seal-colored satin. The front of the skirt is rather short, showing the shoe. It is bordered, rather than trimmed, with ruching, which falls over the foot. Under the ruching is a close kilt pleating, and under this is the balayeuse. Above the ruching are three rows of inserted ivory of seal-colored faille pullings. The seat vest has a long basque buttoning to the side which reaches to the pullings on the skirt. The colored enameled buttons are square. The satin habit has seal-skin revers, cut very open, over the breast. It is not buttoned, but is fastened down at the seams by a metal "chainette." The revers on the shirt are fastened below the hips under a rosette. Satin plaits are on either side of the revers. The combination of seal-skin and satin forms in the back a long habit-basque.

Fashionable Furs.

The choice of furs becomes, from winter to winter, a more difficult matter. Almost every kind of fur is now imitated, seal-skin even not excepted. Furriers now dye many real furs, to make them blacker and more glossy; so it is by no means easy to distinguish the real articles from the imitation. The length of the hair is a very good indication of the quality of the fur, the long-haired fur being the best. In Paris, but most fashionable furs this year are black and dark shades. Among the ordinary kinds of black fur are the "chinchilette" and "Siberienne," and when these come beaver and skunk. After the black furs is the mountain-rat, which is not dyed, but, being a common skin, is only used for ordinary dresses and travelling suits. Gilded, silver and blue fox are much in favor as ever. These furs are only suitable for velvet and satin garments. They are also much used for lining evening garments and opera-cloaks. White hare, swan and ermine, which are not much used for lining purposes, are reserved exclusively for children's suits and garments. Chinchilla, though not fashionable, is always worn. "Grebe" is a kind of feather trimming, although it is classed among furs. It is principally used for young girls' suits. "Thibet" fur, in its natural color, has a silvery shade, and is dyed to great advantage for bonnets. Seal-skin, this winter, is so much, if not more, worn than ever. It is considered the most stylish of all furs, and is worn by gentlemen as well as ladies. Coats, vests, caps and trimmings are made of this fur. Ladies' seal-skin garments are very long. Young ladies wear half tight-fitting seal-skin paletots, with the Persian cap to match. Confections trimmed with bands of seal-skin are very handsome, especially when the material is satin or "gros de Suez" in the same shade as the fur.

Schliemann's Further Excavations at Troy.

Dr. Schliemann, after an interruption of five years and a half, resumed, Sept. 20 last, his search for the buried Troy. He is obliged to give the Imperial Museum at Constantinople two-thirds of the discoveries, and to bear all the expenses, now amounting to $2,000 a month. A delegate of the Turkish Government is on the spot, and a guard of ten gendarmes is furnished. At Hissarlik, where all the excavations have been made, Dr. S. traces the remains of no fewer than four pre-historic cities which had been built on the same site, and the second of these is, he emmitaius, the Homeric Troy. He expects, before the season of operation closes, to bring to light the whole western and northern part of the circuit wall, the construction of which Homer ascribes to Poseidon and Apollo (Iliad vii:453), as well as all that remains of the prehistoric mansion immediately in the southern and west of the great gate, which he attributes to the ancient town's King, because it is the largest and best built house in the city. It is were found hundreds of remarkable objects, and close to it the treasure-room exhibiting the fourth conflagration of the scene. The walls of this mansion are at a depth of about twenty-eight feet below the surface of the hill, and lie deeply like the cyclopean walls of the Royal Palace at Mycenæ, and the cyclopean houses at Tiryns. They are remarkable for their symmetry, to a great extent, and very elevated wooden building, for otherwise there is no way of explaining the finding of so many black and yellow wood ashes, latter mixed with charcoal, by which they are covered to a depth of about 20 feet. Among these ashes the doctor has recently found a red hand-made vase, containing, among other things, twenty gold earrings, four gold hairpins, a large number of gold beads, a bracelet of electrum, fragments of necklaces.

Most remarkable among the new discoveries is a wall of fortification, built of wood, eleven feet long, with the throat charred black as coal. At this depth of twenty-eight feet, other objects of various kinds are constantly being unearthed. Three gates before the prehistoric mansion have been found, each varying in breadth respectively from ten to seventeen and one-fourth feet. Unfortunately, the approach of winter, which is severe in that region, will suspend further excavations until spring. The serious antiquarian is sure that, eventually, he will be able to prove to the most skeptical that he has struck the site of the City of Priam, and to more fully identify the ruins with the localities described by Homer.

THE Pope has published a letter of vague signification. Although the date of the Trojan War can be fixed with some approach to accuracy, there is a vast period of time deeper in the womb of ages, beyond the reach of chronology. It is only of late years that we have begun to form some idea of the immense lapse of time from the creation to the present day. The Egyptian manuscript has man annals back into ages that we take no account of. The Egyptian priests restored the time from the reign of Helius to Alexander at about 23,000 years. Cicero speaks of the memorials of the Babylonians as embracing a period of 470,000 years, and Pliny cites Ephesus as saying that they were in possession of astronomical observations inscribed on baked bricks, extending 720,000 years. The Chinese and Hindoo cosmogonists claim a fabulous antiquity almost beyond calculation. It is obvious that the ancient National bid no belief or tradition that they were living in the world's youth.—Philadelphia Press.

A Railroad-Car Incident.

An amusing incident happened on a New York and New Haven train, the other day. When the train arrived at the depot in New Haven an old gentleman got up and started for the rear end of the car. He had gone but a few steps before the old lady who had been sitting with him in the seat behind him full of knitting work and followed him down the aisle, her hands extended. It was noticed by the passengers that her ball of yarn was in his pocket. When he got up he turned around several times before starting, and in so doing had wound the yarn around him so that the old lady had no choice except to follow him. Drop her knitting or unwind her yarn broken. She said not a word but a passenger, noticing what was going on, reached up and gently taking the unconscious old gentleman by the arm, turned him around so he saw what he was doing, and the yarn was unwound. By this time the rest of the passengers were roaring with laughter.—Bridgeport (Conn.) Standard.

A Fatherly Man.

Griswold street, from Fort to Congress, offers such superior facilities for falling down in the winter that it would be a boon to the public to have it worn the bright and cheerful side of life long enough that section a great deal longer to the north from the climax occurs. Seven of them stood in a row yesterday morning as a fatherly, unwieldy citizen turned the corner of the Moffatt Block.

"Select your spot!" they yelled, as he reached the descent, and in about a minute he reached the conclusion that they had gathered there to see him fall. Some men would have jumped aside into the street, but this fatherly man continued on. He resolved to himself:

"Now, these boys are poor, forlorn boys. They seldom have any fun. They are hungry, ragged, and do not look forward to Christmas. They wish me to fall. If, by falling, I can add to their happiness, it is my duty to do so."

Those boys may never know that that good man fell on purpose to please them. He suddenly made a slip to the left, stretching out his leg until it looked to be ten feet long—then a slip to the right, and as he recovered he struck his heels toward the South Pole, clawed out like a million eagles wings fastened together, and the answers here he down three sixteen feet. He didn't get up and tell the boys that it was a put-up job to lighten their burdened cares and sorrow for a moment, but he knows and the reader knows that it was.—Detroit Free Press.

A Silver Plank.

A few days ago, the express brought to this city a large quantity of silver coin, supposed to be $30,000. It was consigned to the Fourth National Bank, corner of Third and Walnut streets. There would have been nothing strange about this incident if it had not been known that the coin was of an extraordinary kind, and was enveloped in a mysterious history. It was of the half-dollar denomination, and every piece bore the date of the American Flag, showing that it was coined prior to 1834. The strangest feature of all remains, however, to be recited. Not one of the coin has ever been in circulation, and are as bright and rough as when they dropped from the mint, nearly half a century ago. Where has this money been all these years? It is now known that the $30,000 received in Cincinnati is only part of the whole amount of $75,000 of this coin which has been shipped from Pittsburgh to various points of the country. One theory is that it is a thief's "plant," just discovered and dug up by some lucky fellow. Another theory is the result of a speculatory light—Jack knows that, shortly after the date of this money's coinage, under Gen. Jackson's Administration, silver was debased. Might it not be, then, that some one investing largely, had the debased coin and hoarded it away on a speculation? Whatever the history of the strange money be, it is a curiosity. It has become almost of National importance to know that $75,000 of this ancient silver is being poured into the current of trade.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

What it Costs to Die in Cincinnati.

When a corpse becomes a corpse, the first thing to do is to notify the undertaker. He comes at once, and takes complete control of the whole matter, and does not surrender his full charge until he receipts the bill. Of course, he furnishes everything, and the bill of undertaker's is a first-class funeral will read about as follows:

Coffin	$30
Hearse	20
Crape
Gloves
Flowers	50
Total

A cheaper funeral than this, of course, is procurable, and the majority of funerals are cheaper than this. A very respectable pageant may be gotten up for from $50 to $75, and a poor man can have his funeralized on, and that without outlay, to go to his grave followed by three or four carriages, in addition to those of his friends who may be in attendance.

These are only medium funerals, and if we should quote prices at the high notch, it would not be less than $1,000 more, or about $1,500 to die stylishly. And about $500 to lade away in snarcidinarily respectable quiet manner. This is in painful contrast with the burial of the poorer of the families in the neighborhood, and consequently were left to themselves. That, apparently, was what they desired, and why they came to Punkapag. For after its black bass, and wild duck, and teal, solitude is the chief charm of Punkapag. Perhaps its perfect rural loveliness should be included. Lying high up under the wing of the Blue Hills, and in the odorous breath of pines and cedars, it chances to be the most enchanting bit of genuine country within fifty miles of Boston, which, moreover, can be reached in half an hour's ride by railway. But the nearest railway station (Deerfoot) is pretty nearly two miles distant, and the seclusion is without a flaw. Punkapag has one mail a day; two mails a day would reader the place uninhabitable.

The village—it looks like a compact village at a distance, but narrows and disappears the moment you drive into it—has quite a large floating population. It is a favorite resort of lovers and pickerel. Along the Old Bay Road, a highway even in the Colonial days, there are a number of attractive cottages straggling off toward Milton, which are occupied for the summer by people from the city. These birds of passage are a distinct class from the permanent inhabitants, and the two seldom closely assimilate unless there has been some previous connection. It seemed to me that our new neighbors were to come under the head of permanent inhabitants; they had built their own house, and had the air of intending to live in it all the year round.

"Are you not going to call on them?" I asked my wife, one morning.

"When they call on us," she replied, tightly.

"But it is our place to call first, they being strangers."

This was said as seriously as the circumstance demanded; but my wife turned it off with a laugh, and I said no more, always trusting to her intuitions in these matters.

She was right. She would not have been received, and a cool "not a home" would have been a bitter social pill to us if we had gone out of our way to be courteous.

I saw a great deal of our neighbors, nevertheless. Their cottage lay between us and the Postoffice—where he was never to be met with by any chance—and I caught frequent glimpses of the two working in the garden. Floriculture did not appear as much an object as exercise. Possibly it was neither; maybe they were engaged in digging for specimens of those arrowheads and flint hatchets which are continually coming to the surface hereabouts. There is scarcely an acre in which the plowshare has not turned up some primitive stone weapon or domestic utensil, doubtfully left to us by the red men who once held this domain—an ancient tribe called the Punkypoags, a forlorn descendant of which, one Polly Crowd, figures in the annual Blue Book, down to the close of the Southern war, as State pauperee. I quote from the local historiographer.

Whether they were developing a kitchen-garden or ennobling Prof. Schliemann at Mycenæ, the newcomers were evidently persons of refined musical taste. The lady had a voice of remarkable sweetness, although of no great compass, and I used often to linger of a morning by the high gate and listen to her executing an operatic air, conjecturally at some window upstairs, for the house was not visible from the public road. The husband, somewhere about the grounds, would occasionally respond with tenor or three bars. It was all quite an ideal Arcadian business. They seemed very happy together, these two persons, who asked no odds whatever of the community in which they had settled themselves.

There was a queerness, a sort of mystery, about the couple which I admit, piqued my curiosity, though, as a rule, I have no morbid interest in the affairs of my neighbors. They behaved like a pair of lovers who had run off and got married clandestinely. I willingly acquitted them, the one and the other, of having no legal right to do so; for, to change a word in the lines of the poet,

"It is a joy to cheat the best
Of human kind."

Admitting the hypothesis of elopement, there was no mystery in their bother sending nor receiving letters. But where did they get their groceries? I do not mean the money to pay for them—that is an enigma apart—but the groceries themselves. No express wagon, no baker's cart, no vehicle of any description was ever observed to stop at their domicile. Yet they did not order family stores at the side establishment in the village—an inexhaustible little bottle of a shop which sold (I should think for cash) almost anything in the way of groceries, from a handsaw to a pocket-handkerchief. I think that I allowed this unimportant detail of their housekeeping to occupy more of my speculation than was creditable to me.

In several respects our neighbors reminded me of those inexplicable persons who contrive to maintain genteel cities, though seldom or never in suburban places, where the field may be considered restricted for their operations—persons who have no perceptible means of subsistence, and manage to live royally on nothing a year. They hold no Government bonds, they possess no real estate (our neighbors did own their house), they toil not, neither do they spin, yet they reap many of the numerous advantages that usually result from honest toil and well-spinning. How do they do it? But this is a digression, and I am quite of the opinion of the old lady in "David Copperfield" who says, "Let us have no meandering!"

Though my wife declined to risk a correspondence on our respective lines of family, I saw no reason why I should not speak to the husband as an individual, when I happened to encounter him by the wayside. I made several approaches to do so, when it occurred to me that perhaps he was not aware of the existence of my family, and had the air of trying to avoid me. I resolved to put the suspicion to the test, and one forenoon, when he was sauntering along on the opposite side of the road, in the vicinity of Fisher's saw-mill, I deliberately crossed over to accost him. The brusque manner in which he hurried away was not to be misunderstood. Of course, I was not going to force myself upon him.

It was at this time that I began to form uncharitable suppositions touching our neighbors, and would have been as well pleased if some of my choicest fruit trees had not overhung their wall. I determined to keep my eyes open later in the season, when the fruit should be ripe to place, in some folds, a sense of the delicate shades of difference between meum et tuum does not seem to be very strongly developed in the moon of cherries, to use the old Indian phrase.

I was sufficiently magnanimous not to impart any of these sinister impressions to the families with whom we were on visiting terms; for I despise a gossip. I would say nothing against the persons up the road until I had my own house, and had the air of intending to live in it all the year round.

"Are you not going to call on them?" I asked my wife, one morning.

"When they call on us," she replied, tightly.

"But it is our place to call first, they being strangers."

This was said as seriously as the circumstance demanded; but my wife turned it off with a laugh, and I said no more, always trusting to her intuitions in these matters.

DO WE WELL TO MOURN?

Yes, grieve! It can be no offense to Him
Who up so is sensitive our love to know
The hand that takes the cup filled to the brim
May well with trembling make it overflow.

Who sends us sorrow means it should be felt:
Who pays on tears would surely have them
And "Jesus" that the "furnace" cloth not melt,
May yet be hardened all the more instead.

Where love abounded will the grief abound!
To close our grief is but to elude our hurt
With withered leaves the more bestrewed the ground.
The fuller that the rose hath bloomed above!

Yes, grieve! 'tis Nature's—that is, God's—behest.
If what is Nature called is will divine;
Who fain would grieve not cannot know how blest.
It is to sorrow, and yet not repine.

THE OLD STONE BASIN.

In the heart of the busy city,
In the searching noon-tide heat,
A cool and tranquil spot is,
And on the tin dot of the street.

It falls in a gray stone basin,
And over the cool wet brink
The heads of thirsty horses
Each noontide are stricken to drink.

And peeping between the crowding heads
As the horses come and go,
The tiff of a lone little lady's
Is read on the stone below.

Ah, heads are not taught letters,
They know no alphabet;
And never a horse in all those years
Has read the words, and yet

I think that each full-worn creature
Who stops at the brink, by the way,
Its thanks, in his own dumb fashion,
To the sisters small must pay.

Tops large gray by since they bands
Wrought at the basin's stone;
The kindly little sisters
Are all to women grown.

I do not know their home or fame
Or the name they bear to men,
But the sweetness of their gracious deed
Is just as fresh as then.

And all life long, and after life,
They must the happier be,
For this "Cup of Water given by them
When they were children three.

OUR NEW NEIGHBORS AT PONKAPOG.

When I saw the little house building, an eighth of a mile beyond my own, on the Old Bay Road, I wondered who were to be the tenants. The modest structure was set well back from the road, among the trees, as if the inmates were to care nothing whatever for a view of the stylish equipages which sweep by during the summer season. For my part, I like to see people passing, in town or country; but each has his own taste. The proprietor, who seemed to be also the architect, had a new house, superintended the various details of the work with an assiduity that gave me a high opinion of his intelligence and executive ability, and I congratulated myself on the prospect of having some very agreeable neighbors.

It was quite early in the spring, if I remember, when they moved into the cottage—a newly-married couple evidently; the wife very young, pretty, and with the air of a lady; the husband somewhat older, but still in the first flush of manhood. It was understood in the village that they came from Baltimore; but no one knew them personally, and they brought no letters of introduction. (For obvious reasons I refrain from mentioning names.) It was clear that, for the present at least, their own company was entirely sufficient for them. They made no advances toward the acquaintance of any of the families in the neighborhood, and consequently were left to themselves. That, apparently, was what they desired, and why they came to Punkapag. For after its black bass, and wild duck, and teal, solitude is the chief charm of Punkapag. Perhaps its perfect rural loveliness should be included. Lying high up under the wing of the Blue Hills, and in the odorous breath of pines and cedars, it chances to be the most enchanting bit of genuine country within fifty miles of Boston, which, moreover, can be reached in half an hour's ride by railway. But the nearest railway station (Deerfoot) is pretty nearly two miles distant, and the seclusion is without a flaw. Punkapag has one mail a day; two mails a day would reader the place uninhabitable.

The village—it looks like a compact village at a distance, but narrows and disappears the moment you drive into it—has quite a large floating population. It is a favorite resort of lovers and pickerel. Along the Old Bay Road, a highway even in the Colonial days, there are a number of attractive cottages straggling off toward Milton, which are occupied for the summer by people from the city. These birds of passage are a distinct class from the permanent inhabitants, and the two seldom closely assimilate unless there has been some previous connection. It seemed to me that our new neighbors were to come under the head of permanent inhabitants; they had built their own house, and had the air of intending to live in it all the year round.

"Are you not going to call on them?" I asked my wife, one morning.

"When they call on us," she replied, tightly.

"But it is our place to call first, they being strangers."

This was said as seriously as the circumstance demanded; but my wife turned it off with a laugh, and I said no more, always trusting to her intuitions in these matters.

She was right. She would not have been received, and a cool "not a home" would have been a bitter social pill to us if we had gone out of our way to be courteous.

I saw a great deal of our neighbors, nevertheless. Their cottage lay between us and the Postoffice—where he was never to be met with by any chance—and I caught frequent glimpses of the two working in the garden. Floriculture did not appear as much an object as exercise. Possibly it was neither; maybe they were engaged in digging for specimens of those arrowheads and flint hatchets which are continually coming to the surface hereabouts. There is scarcely an acre in which the plowshare has not turned up some primitive stone weapon or domestic utensil, doubtfully left to us by the red men who once held this domain—an ancient tribe called the Punkypoags, a forlorn descendant of which, one Polly Crowd, figures in the annual Blue Book, down to the close of the Southern war, as State pauperee. I quote from the local historiographer.

Whether they were developing a kitchen-garden or ennobling Prof. Schliemann at Mycenæ, the newcomers were evidently persons of refined musical taste. The lady had a voice of remarkable sweetness, although of no great compass, and I used often to linger of a morning by the high gate and listen to her executing an operatic air, conjecturally at some window upstairs, for the house was not visible from the public road. The husband, somewhere about the grounds, would occasionally respond with tenor or three bars. It was all quite an ideal Arcadian business. They seemed very happy together, these two persons, who asked no odds whatever of the community in which they had settled themselves.

There was a queerness, a sort of mystery, about the couple which I admit, piqued my curiosity, though, as a rule, I have no morbid interest in the affairs of my neighbors. They behaved like a pair of lovers who had run off and got married clandestinely. I willingly acquitted them, the one and the other, of having no legal right to do so; for, to change a word in the lines of the poet,

"It is a joy to cheat the best
Of human kind."

Admitting the hypothesis of elopement, there was no mystery in their bother sending nor receiving letters. But where did they get their groceries? I do not mean the money to pay for them—that is an enigma apart—but the groceries themselves. No express wagon, no baker's cart, no vehicle of any description was ever observed to stop at their domicile. Yet they did not order family stores at the side establishment in the village—an inexhaustible little bottle of a shop which sold (I should think for cash) almost anything in the way of groceries, from a handsaw to a pocket-handkerchief. I think that I allowed this unimportant detail of their housekeeping to occupy more of my speculation than was creditable to me.

In several respects our neighbors reminded me of those inexplicable persons who contrive to maintain genteel cities, though seldom or never in suburban places, where the field may be considered restricted for their operations—persons who have no perceptible means of subsistence, and manage to live royally on nothing a year. They hold no Government bonds, they possess no real estate (our neighbors did own their house), they toil not, neither do they spin, yet they reap many of the numerous advantages that usually result from honest toil and well-spinning. How do they do it? But this is a digression, and I am quite of the opinion of the old lady in "David

Taxpayers and Harbormen—Congress adjourned for the holidays without the Committee on Commerce preparing an appropriation bill. They were to have appointed a subcommittee to prepare a bill during the recess, but failed to do so. The South proposes to fight the bill unless the money herein are appropriated for the improvement of numerous rivulets in their creek a be expended.

The Argentine Republic has an army: It is composed of twelve generals, forty-two colonels, seven hundred minor officers, and two thousand men, or whom at least one thousand can report at any time as fit for duty. With a few more generals and colonels, a field marshal or two, a commander-in chief, and a brass band, the Argentine hosts would be a terror to the surrounding nations. Let us be thankful that Argentine is a long way off, and that none of our near dour neighbors are armed to the teeth in this way.

The Petoskey Record gives an account of the wanderings in the woods of Mr. A. G. A Hornham, of Bear Lake, Emmet county, who started on the 19th inst, from his home to go to Gaylord, Otsego county. He took the train at Petoskey on the morning of the 11th, leaving the train at Almira, from whence a wagon-road runs east to Gaylord. He arrived at Gaylord in safety, and started out to look up the land. He soon became confused and lost. He was without provisions of any kind and but for his gun and supply of ammunition must have soon starved to death. As it was he was able to secure enough game for food, but his sufferings from exposure and cold were terrible. For eight long, weary days and nights he struggled on. The Record closes a somewhat lengthy account of his wanderings as follows:

At night seeking together a few leaves, and ensconcing himself under the lee of a fallen tree, he stretched his limbs for repose, only to resume his weary tramp in the morning. One eventful night, he spent in clinging to the overhanging branches of a tree which he was obliged to climb to escape a pack of wolves, following on his trail, whose horrid jaws, with their gleaming rows of teeth, perpetually met his vision through the slowly receiving hours of terrible agony, as they prowled about. At last, on the eighth day, with feet frozen, having been entirely without protection for them during the last day, he dragged his weary limbs into Alpena, a distance of about sixty miles from where he commenced his terrible march. He traveled almost incessantly during the hours of daylight, and frequently doubled on his track. After a short rest, he started from Alpena for home, arriving at Petoskey Monday night. On Tuesday morning, soon, he hied him Bear Lakeward, where he expresses himself as entirely willing to stay, having no desire to repeat his thrilling experience of the past two weeks.

Will Myers and a few other roughs disturbed a prayer meeting at Stone Ledge Lake, seven miles south of Cadillac, Saturday, Dec. 27th. After services they were asked for an explanation of their conduct by Jack Wand and Charley Crand. After some words a fight followed, in which long hunting knives were used. Crang was cut in the bowels, and Wand received five cuts in the shoulder and one in the lungs. Both are in a critical condition. It was cool inspiring prayer meeting, full of grace, peace, good will to men, and muscular Christianity.

They are mounted upon a shield of ash, with the names of the donor and recipient affixed in cut black walnut letters. O. S. Smith, of this place, did the mounting, and it speaks well for his skill.

RIVERS AND HARBORS.

More Favorable News Regarding Appropriations.

The reports that no harbor and river bill would be likely to pass this winter seem to have had no foundation. Mr. Congressman Dunnel, of the Committee on Commerce, does not credit the reports that there will be no river and harbor appropriation bill this year. He says there is a feeling among some Southern members that the Secretary of War has not expended the money appropriated for the public works in the South as freely as in the North, but this will not be used to prevent the passage of the regular bill. The committee will, he thinks, report one next week. Mr. Reagan, the chairman of the committee, is in favor of having the bill as usual.

A circumstance that seems most favorable for Charlevoix, and, in fact, all harbors in the 9th District, is that Congressman Hubbell is one of a sub-committee of three which were on Wednesday last ordered to prepare a bill.

A Grand Haven gentleman writing on New Year's Day says:

The steamer Amazon, Minneapolis and Forest City are lethargic full cargoes of eastward bound freight to Grand Haven as often as the weather permits. The D. G. H. & M. R. R. find it different to furnish cars for so large an amount of freight, but there has been no blockades as yet. The steamers have been delayed but little by ice. The Amazon was stopped a few hours by slush ice here on Christmas. She started for Milwaukee Monday night, but a westerly wind had jammed the ice against this shore and prevented her from getting out. The Minneapolis arrived outside form Milwaukee on Tuesday, and being likewise unable to break through the ice which had accumulated, was unable to enter the harbor, and lay just outside the pier. She was still lying there Wednesday morning. However, the wind is now blowing from the southeast, and if it continues, will drift the ice into the lake and free the steamer.

The G. R & I. R. R Lands.—In the eastern portion of this county, and in fact all along the line of their road north of Grand Rapids, the Grand Rapids and Indiana Railroad Company have large quantities of lands which are being sold at from five to twelve dollars per acre. They embrace some of the best farming lands in Michigan, and are rapidly being rapidly settled up. Persons looking for homes in Michigan will miss one of the grandest opportunities of their lives if they fail to correspond with this company before purchasing. Send for their pamphlet.

The masquerade dance will be on Friday, the 21st of February.

The building occupied by the Chicago Postoffice and also as Gen. Sheridan's headquarters, and for various other purposes, was destroyed by fire on the 5th. The total loss is estimated at $175,000. The mail matter was all saved. The building was owned by the Connecticut Mutual Insurance company.

OUR BOARD.

"Tax-Payer" Relieves his Mind Regarding of the last Session of the Board of Supervisors.

Mr. Editor—

The first day of January, 1879, will be a day long to be remembered by the citizens of Michigan. It was on that day that the Legislature met at the new capitol building at Lansing, and the Board of Supervisors of Charlevoix county met at Charlevoix.

Now Mr. Editor, don't tell me that I am mistaken, and that the Supervisors met on the second, at one o'clock P. M., per adjournment, for I can produce written evidence that they met on the first.

Our first witness is Mr. Supervisor Wooden who presents a bill to the Board for one half day on the first, and one day on the second, when he did not get to the meeting until after adjournment on the second. He also draws his twenty five miles traveling fees.

Our next is J. E. Dalish, who charges for one half day on the first, and a day on the second, and mileage. His name does not appear on the records of that day.

Next, Gen. W Bailey gets half a day on the second His name is not found on the record of that day.

J. H. Ackerson, one day on the first, all day on the second; not present to answer to his name on the record.

W. C Niles, is quite modest in presenting his bill for two dollars per day, for Dec 31, 1878, and Jan. 1, 79, for committee work, and for a full day's attendance on the 2d.

Kent, Smith, Ward, Weaver and Hicks all made out a full day on the second.

So you see there must be some mistake about the Board, at their N-v. session, adjourning to meet Jan. 2d, at one o'clock. If that were so, there could be no full attendance on that day as there seems to have been. Certainly no member of that Board would charge for a day's attendance when they were not present a full day, and no honorable body like our Board of Supervisors would allow it if they did.

Messrs. Robinson and Wood were not so fortunate as some of their fellows in their division of favors, but they did very well. Robinson charged for a half day on the fifth, one day on the sixth, and mileage, while Wood came in for a full day and mileage, while he was present but half a day.

Now, Mr. Editor, all this proves one of two things: Either that the Board met on the first, or that a majority of that Board are guilty of misdemeanor. [See Sec. 30, page 241, Compiled Laws of 1871.]

What did that honorable body do during their four day's session? They approved certain county officers bonds, which could have been done by the Judge of Probate. Yes, they reduced the county officers salaries twenty five per cent. Grand saving; but it was more than swallowed up by the expense of the two useless extra sessions.

And they did other valuable services, such as the adoption of the report of the Committee on Public Buildings in that report it was recommended that there be an inside door for the jail, "of flat iron, one inch and a half by half inch, with a hole in same one foot square, the hole to be made of half inch iron." Amendment by Mr. Niles, that it "be hung with leather hinges." Ayes and nays called.

Ayes—Ackerson, Bailey, Darrah, Hicks, Kent, Niles.

Nays—Green, Smith, Ward, Weaver, Wooden.

That they got ashamed of this and voted to have it stricken from the record does not disprove the fact they were spending their time in foolishness, and charging the tax-payers three dollars per day for it.

They voted to collect a certain note against J. Ingalls forgetting that a majority of themselves were taking more compensation then the law allowed them.

Yours truly,

TAX PAYER.

Many accepted legal tender, though not without some growling, and others demanded the coin checks. Secty Sherman is represented as being in excellent spirits, because of the smooth working of affairs under the Resumption act. A number of telegrams received by him from different parts of the country were sent over to the President, among them one from Assistant Treasurer Hillhouse, in New York, received early in the day, to the effect that the amount of gold demanded for United States notes was insignificant, and before the close of the office another dispatch from Hillhouse, giving the amount withdrawn as $150,000, and the receipts $830,000, was received and read with much gratification. Orders for 32,000 standard silver dollars were received at the Treasury Department on the 24.

THERE were 217 failures reported in New York City during the past year, with liabilities of $63,004,402, and assets of $42,093,501. This exceeds the record of any former year, but the large number is mainly due to the repeal of the Bankrupt act.

The Postoffice has been temporarily located in the Singer Building, corner Washington and State streets.

SNOW fell at Vicksburg, Miss., and Shreveport, La., on the 5th. The weather was unusually severe throughout almost the entire South. One man was frozen to death near New Orleans. How She Won Him.

Two beautiful young girls, though of different temperaments and style of beauty, were in love with the same young gentleman in a northern suburb, or—which comes to the same thing in effect—desired to become so. One was a plump, rubust and vivacious brunette; the other an ethereal and sentimental blonde, of whom one admirer—a Boston young man—said that "fastidious critics might describe her as blanched and etiolated." The young man was rather taken by the latter, who had a bewitching sigh and a far-away dreamy look, and, when refreshments were passed around, contented herself with pecking timidly at a macaroon, like a dyspeptic canary, and the brunette felt that she must deliver a nasty-sweet stroke over the holidays, or else the young man was lost, and, in the pressure of stringency of the matrimonial market, such a catastrophe was not to be contemplated with calmness. Accordingly, a week ago last night, she invited the young man to "come and see us" from church, and on the way said: "Won't mother girl Lucy let?" "She is, indeed," warmly answered the young man, pleased to hear the woman in question was almost engaged to so warmly espoused, "and shiny and delicate!" "Yes, indeed," resumed the apparently guileless girl; "and she would make a very nice wife for anyone who could afford it." "Why?" said the young man, quite interested, "I wouldn't cost much to board her—she doesn't eat any more than Molly Fangbone." "Perhaps not," replied the temptress; "but even if she didn't the money wouldn't go into her husband's pocket, for the woman that keeps the boarding-house would always have the same anyhow, and, in point of fact, it would be her husband more, for the Bologna sausage, pimento, fat hams, sandwiches, plum-cake, and so on that one would eat between meals would have to be furnished by herself. In fact like when you have your own pantry to go to." "Bologna sausage!" said the young man, somewhat nervously; "do you mean to say that an ethereal angel like Lucy has designs on Bologna sausage between meals?" "They all do it," responded the companion, "and in that manner ruin their stomachs and lose their appetites, so that they look delicate." But it would be different if she had a home of her own, where she could do her own housework, and have a sufficiency of plain food, which—" "But if she had a home of her own she couldn't do her own housework; she'd be too delicate for that, and her husband'd have to hire a servant girl that would eat as much as three." And the girl came very near for her sister tried it, and overtaxed her strength, and for nine years she has been an invalid, and has to be fed on liver, wings of chickens and dry champagne, three pints a day. Poor creature! I pity them. I knew I seem vulgarly coarse and unpoetical to many young men, because I eat so heartily, but since I was seven years and eighteen months old I haven't cost mamma and papa a dollar for doctor's bills, I can carry a scuttle of coal in each hand heaping full, and I always get up before the servant-girl in cold weather to light the fires—the sensation is so delightful; just like electricity and champagne." This last touch settled the young man; he cried in raptures, "Be mine!" and it was 2:30 a. m. on Monday before she let him out of the front door. On Monday afternoon he was seen at a well-known jeweler's getting a set of pearls and sapphires changed for something more becoming to a lady of dark complexion. Alas, poor Lucy!

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—Hiram Lee, the son of the Sheriff of the county, was shot through the head, by Wm. Natt, at Shoe Heel, N. C., the other day, and killed. The difficulty grew out of some misunderstanding about a young lady in the neighborhood. Both of the lives had been paying the lady marked attention. Natt sent word to the deceased that he must cease his visits to the girl. An insulting answer was returned to this demand. The men met on a public road, next morning, with the result given.

—South Boston was recently the scene of a dastardly murder. James H. Fox, a young man, a teamster, was sitting in his tenement punishing his nancy three-year-old girl by slapping her face, when his brother-in-law, Edward Donovan, an overgrown schoolboy, seventeen years of age, took umbrage and struck Fox. Fox returned the blow, whereupon Donovan left with a challenge to Fox to come on the street and he would fix him. Fox, however, remained in the house. In ten minutes Donovan returned, armed with an ugly two-edged knife made from an old file, and Fox was cut to death, which occurred in less than a minute by his burying the knife in Fox's bowels.

—A bloody tragedy is reported near Keokuk, Iowa. The family of Shreveport, La. Wiley Holmes, married to a sister of Ben Talbert, had some family misunderstanding with the brother-in-law. Both happened out hunting one day, and met on the road. Talbert ordered Holmes to halt, and aimed his gun at him. Holmes raised his gun, and both fired simultaneously, each shot taking effect. They then dismounted and fired again. Talbert fell in the road and Holmes walked to a house near by, falling exhausted on the doorstep. Talbert came up and stepped over Holmes, into the house, asking for a gun to finish him. He, too, fell on the floor, and both expired in a few minutes' time. Holmes was twenty-three and Talbert nineteen.

—A most unfortunate accident recently occurred on the railroad between Sheridan and Wheatland. John Dusel procured a license in this city to marry Miss Ellie O'Brien, of Sheridan. Mr. Dusel went to Sheridan to consummate his marriage. After arriving there he found that a marriage-license issued in Yuba County would be void in Placer, and they resolved to return to Wheatland that evening. A hand-car was procured, and the parties started on their return. Unfortunately, another party started from Wheatland about the same time to go to Sheridan on another hand-car on the same wedding. Neither car carried a light, and somewhere between the two places the cars came together, and the intended bride received injuries to her lower limbs while sitting on the edge of the car which rendered the amputation of both limbs necessary.—Marysville (Cal.) Advertiser.

—A few evenings ago, a young man started from Columbia, in this city on horseback. He thought that it would be more pleasant to ride on the railroad track, and striking the track just out of Columbia spurred his horse into a gallop. Adams says that he thought his familiarity with the track would keep him out of danger, but all at once the horse came to a bridge which was without flooring. Adams was blown over the bridge on his head as the poor animal's legs went through. When he recovered consciousness he found himself hanging head down under the bridge, one foot being fast in the stirrup. He was so badly hurt that he could not lift himself, and there he remained in the greatest agony. There was a whistle and a roar, and he knew that a train was coming. As the wheels crashed over the bridge he felt a shock. The cowcatcher had thrown the horse off, but the saddle was wedged in between sills. He hung until sunrise and was then rescued, almost dead.—Houston (Tex.) Telegram.

THE DEAD FEAST OF THE KOL-FOLK.

[SIBERIA Advocate.]

We have opened the door
Three times, three;
We have sweet the floor,
We have boiled the rice,
Seven times hither, seven hence
Down from the far lands,
Come from the star lands,
Come as before.
We lift a long laugh,
We invite our ancestors,
Come back to our life.
Come Father, come mother,
Come sisters, come brother,
Come, come, come home!
Behold, husband, wife,
Do you see me smiling,
Come take your old places
Come look on our faces,
The dead on the dying,
Come home!

We have opened the door
Three times, three!
We have sweet the floor,
We have boiled the rice,
For the feast of welcome
And we hold the open door
To us who are dead.
Come, come, come!
Come little, come little,
From out the void of nether,
Be young children playing,
The peepul is sighing,
Come in from the rain,
Come father, come mother,
Come sister and brother,
Come husband and wife,
Beneath our feet come,
Look on us again,
The dead on the dying
Come home!

We have opened the door!
For the feast of welcome
We have kindled the coals
We have sweet the floor!
Shame, honor and famine
The curse of the Brahmin
The sin and the shame
They burn in the fire-place,
They waste in and smoke on;
Our debts are paid!
In strange lands for yonder
To earth and to water
We leave to you.

Last then of the fighting
While you are feasting,
Your souls hear hearing,
We send without hearing
We feel you draw near,
Of the dead the dying
Come home!

John Greenleaf Whittier, on Atlantic Monthly.

THE WIDOW WINTERPIPPIN'S WONDERFUL DREAM.

This is just how affairs stood in the house in which Mr. Mercy Chilly and Nathaniel and I—it was a tenement—do not what they call a "first-class" one: but a very nice one—on the Christmas Eve before that Christmas which is now in the basement the three little children of Mrs. Rose, the janitor's wife, were quietly playing with their dolls for the first time in several weeks, having been sick ough into death, and their poor, tired mother was hovering about them, her thin, pale face lighted up with thankfulness and joy, albeit a cloud did flit across it, every now and then, as she thought of the debts contracted during their sickness—debts which at the present moment—Mr. Rose having been out of work for three long months—she had but the faintest hope of ever being able to pay.

On the first floor Mrs. McChilly—old, obstinate and—well, to speak plainly—stingy Mrs. McChilly—spectacles on nose and head held close to the lamp, was looking over her the fifth—the fifth—the bonds, willed her by her brother, who had lately died in San Francisco, and received by her a few days before, making her—already in comfortable, very comfortable circumstances—what in our sphere of life would be considered rich. Her girlish-looking grandchild, daughter, by marriage, was darning the old lady's stockings, and thinking from the long, lovingly-lingering manner, banished from his home half a year ago, by some home which had never been so unsalubrious as the one which he dared to fall in love without his grandmother's consent, and the boyish-looking husband of the grandchild, her, by marriage, was writing a cheerful, affectionate letter to the banished one, under cover of the daily account-book.

On the second floor pretty, gray-eyed, brown-haired Mrs. Skinner was blushing the baby to sleep, and dropping tears on its little, golden head whenever, which was very often, she glanced at her husband who lay snoring on the lounge, having left a convivial party late that afternoon to stagger home, as he had done many times during the last unhappy year, with nothing lured and empty pockets.

On the third floor jolly, plump, black-eyed, rosy-cheeked, generous (out of her income of a thousand a year she gave away at least one-eighth) Widow Winterpippin was cunningly peeping in her bed, thoroughly tired out by a hard day's work and Nannie, her little maid, with the cat in her lap, was dozing in a spasmodic manner in a rocking-chair by the kitchen fire.

And on the fourth floor Brother Nathaniel and I were taking a late supper—because I had been obliged to remain longer than usual at the store where I was clerk, it being the custom of our employer to exact extra service all holiday week (without, however, thinking it necessary to remunerate us for the extra pay), and dear Nat—than whom there never could be a kinder brother

—would not, though he might be ever so hungry, eat supper until I was there to make and pour out the tea. "It tastes so much better from your hand, Sis," he used to say.

Nathaniel was a printer, and had been a time, sidewalk-singing, whistling fellow until that dreadful day in September when he met with the terrible accident which resulted in the loss of his right arm.

Since then he had been on the invalid list, and sang, and whistled, and joked no more. We had, fortunately, some money saved when the misfortune came upon us, but it was now almost exhausted. And Nat began to worry about that, among other things; but I never would hear. Why should I? I had youth, health and strength and two fairly-well hands. And we could manage not to starve or freeze on twelve dollars a week. And we could contrive to keep a cheerful countenance, and I was determined that Nat should make their final curtseys to their partners.

After the dance we had a lovely ballad from Mr. Summer, who had a fine tenor voice, and a comic song from Mr. Rose, who had a voice suited to it. The comic song had a silly, rollicking chorus, in which the company all joined with as much earnestness as though their lives depended upon their doing so.

"Tra-la-la-la-la-la-la
Tra-la-la!" and that will do."

And then supper. Such a supper! Roast turkey, cranberry sauce, delicate, crisp celery, home-made bread, pickles, tongue, stewed oysters, candies and nuts (the latter for the delight of the children's plates). And when we were all through and back to the parlor again—lounging in a half-circle around the grate-fire, a cup of fragrant tea or coffee in every hand, Widow Winterpippin, who sat in the center of the half-circle, said: "I am sure nobody has any objection, I would like to tell you a wonderful dream I had last night."

"Any objection!" "No, indeed!" "Delighted to hear it!" from all sides. And, while the Summer baby crowed itself to sleep in its mother's arms, and the Rosebuds, on the floor at their father's feet—encircled with her new doll clasped to her breast—grouped their shining heads until they sank upon the pillows, Sannie had thoughtfully placed near them, the chairs in a half-circle were drawn closer and all eyes were fastened on the Widow Winterpippin's sunny face.

"I went to bed last night," began the widow, in a low voice, "very tired," "as I intended I think so," said every woman as listener.

"And I began to dream directly. And everybody in this house was in that dream." the widow went on. "Yes, children and all. I thought it was Christmas night, just as it is now, and Nannie and I were sitting, just as we did to-night, for the company to arrive. And they began to arrive as the clock struck seven. First came Mr. and Mrs. Rose and the Rosebuds, looking, smiling and happy that I said at once, 'I'm glad you've come to tell me.'

"'Mrs. McChilly—Mrs. and Mrs. McChilly—(Mrs. McChilly sat bolt upright in her chair and closed her lips firmly as she always did when mentioned), has paid the doctor's bill,' Mrs. Rose began. 'And promised, she having to be deaf, as she sometimes is, to look out for a situation for me,' said Mr. Rose. 'And she says to-day is the birthday of the Savior and He dearly loved little children, and she is going to love me for His sake and be our friend and keep us long as we are good,' said the children, beginning to sing the Sweet By-and-By so loudly that we did not hear Mr. Aubrey come in; but there he was, looking and smiling and his eyes sparkling (Mr. Aubrey was the grandson with whom Mrs. McChilly had quarreled) and he cried out, 'God bless her! say mother's brother. I knew she couldn't stay mad long. She's forgiven me and kissed Alice.' (Alice was the young girl with whom he had fallen in love without the old lady's permission.)

"And all of a sudden there was Mrs. McChilly among them, being welcomed with loving words, and hugs and kisses—the eldest Rosebud and a glass of lemonade ready for her when she came. 'Dear, dear, what is a little money to gratitude and affection like this?'

"'Nothing, answered Mr. Summer, who was there all of a sudden, too, looking his wife and the baby, looking as handsome as he did the first time I saw him, nearly two years ago, and as for Mrs. Summer, her eyes were like stars and her cheeks like roses, and she stole softly to my side, while he was tossing the baby and singing a merry song to it, and whispered: 'A promise has been my Christmas gift, a promise worth all the gold and jewels in the world.' And then Susie Bracket danced in and slyly held out a letter from somebody far away, that I might see and rejoice with her. And Nathaniel—what a ridiculous part of the dream that about Nathaniel Bracket was. Really, I don't think I can tell it."

"Oh, but you must!" I cried.

"Indeed you must!" and all cried.

"Well, if I must, I must," said the widow, with a sweet, little, nervous laugh. "Then Nathaniel followed me into the dining-room, where I had gone to take a last look at the supper table—oh, it's too ridiculous!"

"Nothing of the sort," said Mrs. Summer. "I don't believe it. I've no doubt it was the most sensible thing Nathaniel ever did—in a dream."

"And please go on," begged his wife.

"And he took my hand," the widow went on, "and said—oh, I can't tell you all I dreamed he said, but he ended by saying, 'And so, of course, I never think of you no longer—a poor, crippled fellow like me.' And I said——"

"Why did you say?" cried Nathaniel, springing to his feet and looking eagerly toward her, totally forgetful of the rest of the company.

"Nathaniel Bracket, you're an idiot!"

"Just as I expected," murmured poor Nat, sinking into his chair again.

"'If you have lost your arm—your right arm,'" the widow calmly proceeded, "'you haven't lost your head, and that head, as I happen to know, contains the usual, perhaps a little more than the usual, amount of brains, and if, as I hear, a thousand or two will give you an interest in Tom Allen's business, why what is to prevent me, having a little money at my command and no one to take care of but myself, lending it to you—for the sake of your sister, of whom I am very fond? Or, if you won't look at it in that way, why can't I become a partner, a very silent one, and you manage for me, taking a fair equivalent for your services?' And that's the end——"

"Never!" shouted Nat, springing from his chair once more and taking a few steps toward her. "The dream never ended in that way. Nathaniel spoke some further remark, I'm sure he did."

"I believe he did," said the widow, knitting her pretty brows, as though in thought, while a rosy blush overspread her face, "but dreams grow so shadowy at the last and this became so very indistinct after I had spoken of going into the printing business myself that I can scarcely remember——"

"That Nat Bracket said," prompted Nathaniel, "'God bless you for a darling! and I'll accept the offered loan on condition that you'll add to it a Christmas gift—a gift above all price—your precious self.'"

"Well, well, how did you ever know?" exclaimed the widow in pretended surprise.

"Can't imagine," said Nat, his eyes sparkling with fun for a moment, and then, as she rose from her seat, he came and stood before her and said entreatingly, "But I don't know what answer you dreamed you made."

"Nor I," laughed the widow.

"But I do," said Mrs. McChilly, with an emphatic rap of her cane; "I do—Mrs. Nathaniel Bracket."

And we all shouted and clapped our hands like a parcel of children, and then we all (but one of us, I'm sure, could have told why) cried a little and were quietly feeling for our handkerchiefs to wipe away the tears, when the old lady spoke again, looking down upon the Rosebuds, who were still sleeping. "I will be a friend to those little ones and their parents," she said, "a good friend. That part of the dream shall come true. As for my grandson Alfred——"

"Here he is," screamed Nannie, with a hysteric ring in her voice, as she flung open the door that led into the dining-room.

And there he was, to be sure, with his sweetheart on his arm, and in an instant they were both kneeling before their grandmother, with one of her wrinkled hands in blessing on each bowed, young head.

Mr. Summer turned from the pretty tableau and bent and kissed his wife, and softly whispered something to her that made her eyes like stars" indeed, as she said in a voice trembling with joy, "My dream and the superintendent's office. It is a modest request for the renewal of a season pass on the Alton Road."

SPRINGFIELD, Feb. 13, 1856. R. P. MORGAN, Superintendent, C. A. & R. R.—Dear Sir: Send pass to John." "Here it is, Alfred," said the superintendent. "Use it as much as you will. I will you would take it and send it to me. I shall want to borrow it this afternoon." Acting on this as a precedent, the young man mailed his "I will" the next day, and sent me a new one, case I shall want to use it the first of March. Yours truly,

A. LINCOLN.

Mrs. Senator Jones' Diamonds.

Senator Jones, of Nevada, having replenished his depleted exchequer by a fortunate rise in Sierra Nevada stock, comes back with his beautiful young wife and maiden sister to occupy his half of the Butler Block, on Capitol Hill. He left here five months ago with his home as Gold Hill, "dead broke," in vulgar parlance, or "busted," as the miners term it. Foreseeing the rise in mining stocks, he invested all he could raise or borrow in Sierra Nevada, and reaped a rich return. Still he had not enough to fill the measure of his ambitions. His wife longed for a splendid diamond necklace, for which he had paid in opulent days the sum of $85,000, and while she, being a retiring little body, not given to display, had never worn but once.

"My dear," said he to her one day, "if you will let me invest your diamonds in Sierra Nevada you shall have the proceeds for pin-money."

"As you please," said the dutiful little woman. "You know I never wear them."

Senator Jones is not the man to go hawking his wife's jewels about the streets, so he offered them to the first Jew he met, and received $12,000 for them, which he invested on margin in her name, and to-day she is worth $110,000 in registered bonds. He paid his debts, canceled the mortgage on his $100,000 worth of furniture, which Butler held as collateral for three years' rent, and in less than half a year returns with several millions to spare. Marquette and Mackinac.

Ever since the completion of the Chicago and Northwestern Railroad to the Iron regions of the Upper Peninsula the feeling has been increased that railroad connection ought to be made between the same region and the lower peninsula. By the completion of that road Marquette, Negaunee, Ishpeming and other places of importance were brought into closer connection with Milwaukee and Chicago than with the principal cities of the States in which they are themselves situated; the farmers of Wisconsin received the benefits of a market which belongs properly to the farmers of Michigan; and the members of the Legislature from the Upper Peninsula found their most convenient route to their own State Capital, during the winter season, through three other States. The desire of a more intimate connections between the Upper and Lower Peninsulas led to the introduction, in 1873, of a resolution by Representative Buell, of Menominee, asking for a grant of Government land for the construction of a Railroad from Marquette to Mackinac. But the State conventions of both parties in Michigan had but a few months previously declared against further grants of Government lands in aid of railroads; the shape arises from former grants and subsidies were fresh in the minds of the people; the feeling against further Congressional legislation of that character was general and pronounced, and Mr. Buell's resolution was defeated in the House when it came to a vote on the 19 h of January.

A more direct and unobjectionable method of aiding in the construction of the desired railroad soon suggested itself. The so called swamp lands in the possession of the State had been granted by the general Government to be used for the opening of roads and for the drainage of the country. In the Lower Peninsula a large proportion of these lands had been appropriated to aid in the construction of swamp land roads and ditches, and it must be said, in in many cases, without results that afforded any fair return for the appropriations. The swamp lands in the Upper Peninsula were mostly intact. It was held that also the original grant did not contemplate railroad construction, yet in the peculiar region between Marquette and Mackinac the development of the country and the drainage of the land would be better accomplished by the building of a railroad, with with the necessary ditches on each side, than by any number of swamp land roads. Accordingly a bill was introduced granting these lands for that purpose. After very thorough discussion it passed the House, March 12, 1873, by the very decisive vote of 73 to 13. It was amended in some particulars in the Senate, and passed that body, March 20, by a vote of 23 to 5, and the same afternoon the House concurred in the Senate amendment by a vote of 74 to 6.

The bill as amended provided that to secure the construction of the road, the Board of Control should be authorized to appropriate not to exceed ten sections of State swamp lands per mile to any railroad company that should construct and complete such railroad on or before December 31, 1875. It was also provided that the lands should be selected from the unreserved swamp lands in the counties of Mackinaw, Chippewa, Schoolcraft, and not to exceed 100 sections in Marquette county, and that they should become taxable as fast as they were earned by the company contructing the road. It was made the duty of the Board of Control to give 30 days' public notice of the letting of the contract for the construction of the road, and to let it to the responsible company which should give bonds for the completion of the road for the least number of acres of said lands.

The time which followed were not favorable to railroad building, and although several different parties took some preliminary steps, no contract was made under this act.

As the special session of 1874, an act was passed by more than a two third vote of both houses extending the time for the completion of the road two years; but still no responsible parties could be found to undertake the construction.

In 1875 an amendatory bill was introduced which passed the Senate March 4 by vote of 22 to 9, and the House April 1, vote of 87 to 7. It increased the tie grant to 16 sections per mile, gave the Board of Control power to extend for one year the time for completion, if, from the financial condition of the country and the existing discredit of all railroad investments, difficulties should occur in raising money for the construction of the road; allowed the board to award and convey the number of acres earned upon the road, and exempted the unsold lands from taxation for 16 years.

In 1877 the act was further amended by extending the time for completing the rod 1 to December 31, 1879, and providing that the road should be of the ordinary Michigan gauge of track, furnished with the iron or steel rail of at least the ordinary weight on first class railroads.

Under the latter acts there was at one time a fair prospect that the road would be built. A company was formed in the Upper Peninsula and over $10,000 expended in surveys, but on account of the depression in the iron and other local interests this company could not well raise the necessary funds, but offers to give to any other company that should be organized the reports of its surveys and any other aid that it could furnish. A contract was at last let to Dr. Lamb of New York, who convinced the Board of Control that he could raise the necessary funds. But the hopes arising from this contract have proved delusive, and the Board of Control, seeing no prospect of its fulfillment, have taken steps to formally declare it forfeited.

The project is therefore in nearly the same condition as it was six years ago. But the history of the case shows that the people of the State desire the construction of the road. Three successive Legislatures have, by a vote of more than two thirds of their whole membership, declared in favor of liberal terms to any responsible company that would undertake the work. The same urgent reasons exist now that have existed before to make the construction of the road a matter of importance to the people of the State. The opening of a market for the products of the Lower Peninsula, the development of the wilderness country between the Sault and Marquette, now much of it inaccessible, and the bringing of the two sections closer relations, are as desirable now as ever. The existing financial conditions are better now than they have been since the first act was passed: money is more easily obtained; the value of the lands is better understood, and labor and materials are cheaper than before. A little encouragement from the Legislature, in the way of another extension of the time, if nothing else, would probably now bring about the most desirable result, which the unfortunate condition of financial affairs has hindered for five years past.—Detroit Post and Tribune.

One of the funny Ohio papers thinks that all this talk about Grant in 1880 is the work of his foes.

Canada is getting one feature of a great nation, and that is a great debt. She owes about $150,000,000, and has just arranged for a new loan of $15,000,000.

The Lowell Courier admits that damming the waters of the Nile with bulrushes would be feasibility itself to preventing the American people from honoring Ulysses S. Grant.

Jeff. Davis' book of memoirs is to be published in the Spring, and we shall now have an authentic description of the waist and petticoats into which the Head of a great Nation retired for shelter in the spring of 1865.

Beecher says he is going on no more long lecturing tours, but will stay around home and try to make his prayer meetings what they used.

A son of the Czarowitch put in an appearance last month, and when he was one week old, the Emperor reviewed the Keiff Artillery, and notified the grizzly veterans that this few punk pounds of humanity was commander-in-chief of the regiment.

On the 30th of last month three hundred and six thousand dollars in greenbacks were paid out at the United States Treasury to persons who were entitled to receive gold, but asked for greenbacks in preference. Only one man of all who visited the Treasury that day wanted gold.

The Washington Post, asks, "will the country, by 1880, have sufficiently recuperated from Grant to endure another attack?" To that part of the country which showed its heels at Donaldson, at Vicksburg, and all through Virginia until it fell exhausted at Appomattox, this is probably a serious question.

The Atlanta Constitution says "the Republicans still regard Grant as the coming man, and we hardly know whether to laugh or cry." Possibly; but the Constitution will remember, perhaps, that when it and its fellow rebels, a few years ago, heard that Grant was the coming man they knew mighty quick whether to laugh or cry; and they didn't laugh, either.

Some of the investigators of the House last session, were red hot to have ex-Secretary of the Navy Robeson indicted for alleged malfeasance during his term of office; but they think better of it now; and a consultation of the committee, the other day, disclosed that nearly the whole committee are satisfied that he could not be indicted. If the attempt was made, even the Democrats conceding that the charges have not been proved.

The first cargo of American wheat ever sold in Barcelona Spain, reached there a few days ago. It was Minnesota wheat, 72,000 bushels, carried by an English steamer, whose freight was $18,000. The Spanish flours which examined it were so well pleased that they immediately ordered three more full cargoes, and chartered steamers to carry them. It is thought that thirty-five cargoes will be taken within a month or six weeks. Barcelona is the great wheat port of Spain, and fifteen cargoes of wheat from Southern Russia were on the way there the day the American cargo arrived.

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this. If you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Chester, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

The Swedish Polar Expedition.

Two weeks ago we called attention to the promise of success awaiting Prof. Nordenskjold's Polar Expedition, which was to demonstrate that there was a northern navigable route from Norway to Japan, or, in other words, a northern passage from the Atlantic to the Pacific. A later dispatch, based on information furnished by whalers coming from the Arctic Ocean into the Pacific, reports the advance vessel in the ice at the culminating point of the voyage, and an expedition is to be started from Japan waters to the relief of the ice-bound vessel. After all there is promise of success, to be measured or modified, of course, by the conditions under which the latter part of the voyage has been accomplished.

Americans are more familiar with the attempts to penetrate the Arctic Ocean from Baffin's Bay, under the impulse to discover a northwest passage, or an open Polar Sea, than with those on the line on which the Swedish explorer has been operating. But there were early experiments in this direction as well as in the other. It was the ambition of the old Dutch navigators to discover a northward passage to India, so as to come near the influence of Spain on the Indian and Atlantic Oceans, and as early as 1594 Barentz had made a successful voyage along the northern coast of Asia, passing to the north of Nova Zembla. In 1596 he penetrated to Icy Cape, in Alaska. He had traveled the whole course, but his voyage did not afford much encouragement to commercial interests. In 1607 he sailed for the "open Polar Sea," going between Spitzbergen and Greenland. The next year, searching for a northeast passage, he made another voyage, passing between Nova Zembla and Spitzbergen. Before reaching the Yenisei of North Cape, in Asia, he turned back, and devoted his efforts to the discovery of a northwest passage.

Since that date there has been a revolution in commercial affairs, lessening the importance of a northeast passage to India. But three great rivers of Northern Asia pour into the Arctic Ocean, and the development of the trade of these rivers—the Obi, the Yenisei and the Lena, in connection with the commercial interests of Norway and Sweden, has given in recent years a new impulse to exploration along the Siberian coast. In 1875 Prof. Nordenskjold, of Sweden, advanced the theory that the practicable route to the mouths of the Obi and Yenisei was to the south of Nova Zembla, through the Kara Sea, as this was kept comparatively clear of ice during certain seasons of the year by the river currents. He sailed from Hammerfest, near North Cape, in Europe, June 8, 1875, reached Nova Zembla in six days, crossed the Sea of Kara, and reached the mouth of the Yenisei Aug. 15. This unlocked the basins of the Obi, Irtisch and Yenisei to trade, and caused great excitement in Northern Europe.

Russian explorers, who had been endeavoring to reach the same points from Behring's Strait, took a new tack, and the Russian Government encouraged the Swedish explorer to continue his explorations along the Siberian coast. In 1876 Nordenskjold made a voyage in a steamer to the Yenisei, disposed of his cargo, and returned to Hammerfest, making the whole voyage in less than seven weeks. This was the beginning of a new era in Siberian trade, and Nordenskjold was ambitious to carry his explorations further, to open up trade with the Lena district as he had with the others, and to penetrate, if possible, to Behring's Strait, and thus open a new route to Japan and China.

The third expedition, under the auspices of the Swedish and Russian Governments, sailed from the Norwegian coast July 25, 1878, and reached the mouth of the Yenisei Aug. 3, and three days later two vessels, the Vega and Lena, sailed eastward.

On the 11th of October the world was startled by a dispatch from Yakutsk, a town of Siberia, nearly a thousand miles up the Lena River, announcing the arrival of the ship Lena at that point. A few days later the arrival of the Vega at the mouth of the Lena was announced by Prof. Nordenskjold himself, and one great object of the expedition had been accomplished. A practical route from the Atlantic Ocean to the basins of all the great Siberian Rivers had been discovered, and the coast from the Yenisei to the Lena explored for the first time. But in a few days the Vega sailed for Behring's Strait, and the next information comes from a whaling vessel arrived at San Francisco, to the effect that the Vega is ice-bound above East Cape, or almost in sight of the Pacific.

This is gross news in part, as it is only surmised that the vessel is the Vega. But the relief ship sailing from the Pacific can reach the vicinity of East Cape with comparatively little difficulty, and Prof. Nordenskjold may yet accomplish all the objects of his expedition, and sail out into the Pacific to be hailed as the discoverer of the northwest passage.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

Dying in Paris.

I have, and indeed many others have, pictured something about the expense of living in Paris. Few of us say anything about the expense of dying here. I would earnestly commend to all visitors here to postpone their dying until they get further on in the world. A man is "ruined for life" if he dies here. It is the most expensive place in Europe to shuffle off this mortal coil. Don't do it. Live in spite of the doctor, and his side-de-camp, the enfanticeurs des dieux, the funeral furnishers, the cemetery vampires, and the endless accessories that demand endless francs. The expenses to bury one dead man in Paris in a day would comfortably support a whole family of four persons in America for six months "alive and kicking." The red tape the black cloth, the fuss and the feathers in the most modest style will absorb nearly $500. From the hour that Death comes in the house until he goes out again Monsieur is actively dancing attendance upon him. I am not surprised people dream to die. I begin to feel that way myself the longer I live here. The details of these expenses, however serious the subject may be in every aspect, present nevertheless some amusing traits. For example: When in the bill of items you see "tears, fifteen francs," "weepers, ten francs," and "sobs, twenty-five francs," you are inclined to laugh. When you see a sliding scale of grief represented by social classes and pomp and show, empty carriages and unmerited sham, you are forced to a smile. When you get those big sheets of letter paper, folio de papier, with solemn black borders and the polite sentence of invitation done in splendid flourishes of lively lithographic letters; and when you see a long list of names of family relatives and friends, also beautifully flourished, you are amazed with this document being so strictly exclusive, humorous and jokishly inclined, for frequently some of the possessors of these names are thousands of miles away and perfectly ignorant of the death of the mourned ones. I could fill a couple of columns of the Sun with details of "Les Pompes Funebres," a wholesale and ready-made burying and burial-furnishing establishment at La Villette. But has a monopoly of doing "the dead business." It does "a roaring trade," and divides handsome annual profits to the shareholders, in sums of millions of francs. It is an excellent institution, combining system and promptness to a marvelous degree, and employing thousands of professional "mourners"—tearful personages ready-made or to order. The building since at La Villette is larger than any public edifice in Baltimore, and has every appliance, from nearly one thousand sable-clad black horses to millions of funeral bells, that may be required for every grade of funeral. The men are trained by periodical lessons in the various expressions of "the depths of grief" suitable for funerals of high and low degree, although they are proverbial jokers among themselves, a smile or cheerful expression of face while on duty would involve immediate dismissal. The master of ceremonies, or ordonnateur, is a dramatic personage, dressed like the Speaker of the British House of Commons, or a superb flunkey in black, with a massive steel chain and round cape, in addition to his black silk stockings, patent leather shoes and bright steel buckles, cutaway coat and general court costume. He moves about with

"The Truth, The Whole Truth, And—"

The other day it was necessary for Mr. Pinder to go into court as a witness. Mr. Pinder knows the nature of an oath, and knows, as a man, who would perjure himself for the biggest wad yet farm in Michigan. Mr. Pinder was ordered to stand up, raise his right hand, and swear that he would tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. Then he sat down and a lawyer began:

"Mr. Pinder, you saw this affair, did you?"

"I did."

"Well, state to the jury what took place."

"Well, I was sitting in the house, and my wife suddenly called——"

"Never mind your wife, Mr. Pinder," interrupted the lawyer.

"Why, sir, my wife called to——"

"Never mind your wife, I say! I want to know what you know."

Mr. Pinder had been sworn to tell the truth, and the whole truth, but right at the outset the lawyer wouldn't let him do either one. Then he began:

"I was sitting in my house, when——"

"I don't want to know what happened in your house. A fight took place in the street, and if you were on the spot I want to know it."

"Well, I heard loud talking, and——"

"I want to know if you saw the defendant strike the plaintiff," interrupted the lawyer.

Mr. Pinder had sworn to tell all about it in a truthful manner, but he was now ordered to leave out more than half of "the whole truth" and begin where it suited the lawyer.

"When I crossed the street a woman said——"

"I don't care what a woman said, sir!" shouted the lawyer.

What that woman said should have been told, according to the oath taken, but the lawyer wouldn't have it.

"Well, I saw two men fighting—the plaintiff and defendant here," observed Mr. Pinder.

"Do you swear that these were the men?"

Mr. Pinder had sworn to tell "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," and the lawyer turned right about and hinted that he might not have seen the men he had sworn he saw!

"These were the two men," he answered.

"And you saw blows struck?"

"I did."

"Now, we claim that not a single blow passed!" shouted the lawyer.

He was defending a man with a black eye and a busted nose, who had been arrested while fighting, and Mr. Pinder had seen the fight, and yet he claimed that Pinder didn't see a blow struck.

"I heard——"

"No matter what you heard."

Mr. Pinder had heard plaintiff dare defendant to strike him; and he had sworn to tell the truth, and yet the lawyer forced him into perjury. He wouldn't let him tell the whole truth—nor even half of it.

"Did you see blows passed?" resumed the lawyer.

"I did."

"And you saw the plaintiff strike the defendant first?"

"No, sir; the defendant struck first."

"What! Do you know what you are swearing to? Didn't you just take an oath to tell the truth in this case?"

"I did."

"And now are you trying to mislead the jury by suppressing part of the truth—by telling what you wish to and suppressing what you don't?"

"No, sir. Just as I heard——"

"You heard! We don't want to know what you heard!"

Mr. Pinder didn't want to suppress anything, but he was forced to; he wanted to tell all about it, but they wouldn't let him; he wanted to tell the whole truth, but they wouldn't have it. They made a big perjure himself while swearing to tell the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth.—Detroit Free Press.

Strousberg.

A cable dispatch stated the other day that the famous Dr. Strousberg had offered his creditors three cents on the dollar, and that it was likely to be accepted. Many of our readers will not have forgotten the career of this most extraordinary man. Born in 1823, a Prussian Jew, he came to London in 1855, and in his boyhood joined the Church of England. While a mere youth he dabbled in London journalism, and at twenty-five came to the United States, where he gave lessons in German. It might have been supposed that this country would have proved especially adapted to his peculiar genius; but it was far less so than fifteen years later, and Strousberg, having realized funds by buying some damaged goods and selling them at a heavy profit, returned to London, where he invested his money in a newspaper, and then went to Berlin as agent for an insurance company. A chance acquaintance with some English capitalists led to his becoming a contractor. He went from one work to another, and within a few years was employing over one hundred thousand men, had purchased nearly an entire county in Poland, had an immense mansion in London and another (now the British Embassy) in Berlin, not surpassed by any in the capital. His magnificence was on a corresponding scale. When the famine broke out in East Prussia, he sent whole trains full of provisions at his own cost to the famishing countrymen, and during one winter caused ten thousand portions of soup to be served out daily in Berlin. There is no saying how matters might have prospered with him but for the breaking out of the Franco-German War, which found him by no means in enterprises at once imperilled by that event. Had he declared a failure then he would have merely been delivered a victim of fate, and might have soon made a prosperous fresh start; but he acted, in the hope of completing his railroads, and in the hope of completing his Rothenian iron-works, which it was thought his profits really promised to be colossal. The final collapse came very shortly. He had borrowed money from the Bank of Moscow, and when unable to pay was prosecuted on a charge, not actionable in most countries, of borrowing money from a joint-stock bank on security subsequently deemed inadequate by the public prosecutor, and subjected to long detention, and subsequently—no very great misfortune, one would suppose—bankruptcy. Since then the ex-millionaire has been managing his whilom property in the interests of creditors, of whom he, and his wife also, were considered everything. He is now fifty-eight, and may pick up again, but times are against him. There is no question that his talents and acquirements fit him far out of the crowd of vulgar adventurers. What he lacked is moderation.—N. Y. Times.

Sympathetic Inks.

UNDER the name of sympathetic inks, the ingenuity of mankind has, while being used for writing, leave no visible trace on the paper, but which, through the agency of heat, or by the action of chemicals, are made to appear in various colors. The use of such means for secret correspondence is very ancient, and Pliny and other Roman writers speak of ink of this kind, which, however, was nothing more than fresh milk. Homely sufficed to that powdered charcoal over the surface of the paper upon which characters had been traced with the colorless fluid, when the powder adhered only to those places where the fatty matter of the milk had spread. Such a process, however, was merely mechanical, and the results very crude.

A great number of sympathetic inks may be obtained by means of reactions known to chemistry. For instance, write on paper with a colorless solution of sugar of lead; if the water that is used for the dilution be pure, no trace of the writing will remain when it becomes dry. Now hold the paper over a jet of sulphuretted hydrogen, and the characters will immediately appear on the paper, of an intense black color. The following recipes for inks of this kind are more simple. If writing be executed with a dilute solution of sulphate of iron, the invisible characters will appear of a beautiful blue, if the dry paper be brushed over with a pencil full of a solution of yellow prussiate of potash; or they will be black, if a solution of tannin be substituted for the prussiate. If the characters be written with a solution of sulphate of copper, they will appear brown on exposing to the vapors of ammonia. Another sympathetic ink is afforded by a chloride of gold, which leaves the paper dark purple when acted upon by a salt of tin. A red sympathetic ink may be made in the following manner: Write with a very dilute solution of perchloride of iron—so dilute, indeed, that the writing will be invisible when dry. By holding the paper at the vapor arising from a long-necked glass flask containing sulphuric acid and a few drops of a solution of sulphocyanide of potassium, the characters will appear of a bloodred color, which will again disappear on admitting them to the vapors of caustic ammonia. This experiment can be repeated ad infinitum.

During the war in India, some years ago, important correspondence was carried on by the English by means of the use of rice water as a writing fluid. On the application of iodine, the hieroglyphics immediately appeared in blue characters.

Sympathetic inks which are developed under the influence of heat only are much easier to use than the foregoing. The liquids which possess such a property are very numerous. Almost everyone, perhaps, knows that if writing be executed on paper with a clean quill pen dipped in ordinary fly-blue juice, it becomes absolutely invisible when dry; and that when the paper is heated the writing at once makes its appearance in characters of a brown color. All albuminoid, mucilaginous and saccharine vegetable juices make excellent sympathetic inks. Starch, gelatine, as among the best, the juices of lemon, orange, apple and pear. A dilute solution of chloride of cobalt used for writing is invisible until the paper is heated, when the letters are seen of a beautiful yellow, disappearing again when the paper has cooled down. The salts of cobalt, as the acetate, nitrate, sulphate and chloride, possess a like property. When a dilute solution of these salts is used as an ink, the writing, although invisible when dry, becomes blue when exposed to heat. The addition of chloride of iron, or of a salt of nickel, renders them green, and this opens the way for a very pretty experiment: If a winter landscape be drawn in India ink, and the sky be painted with a wash of cobalt alone, and the branches of the trees be clothed with leaves executed with a wash of cobalt and nickel, and the snow-clad earth be washed over with the same mixture, a magic transformation at once takes place on the application of heat, the winter landscape changing into a summer scene.—Scientific American.

The Birth of a Lake.

John Muir writes, in Scribner for January, of "The Mountain Lakes of California." We quote:

The Merced River, as a whole, is remarkably like an enormous, and it remains but little effort on the part of the imagination to picture it standing upright, with all its lakes hanging upon its spreading branches, the topmost eighty miles in height. Now add all the other lake-bearing rivers of the Sierra, each in its place, and you will have a truly glorious spectacle—an avenue the length and width of the range; the long, slender, gray shafts, the milky-way of arching branches, and the moonlike lakes all clearly defined and shining on the blue sky. How exquisitely such an addition to astronomy would be grand at! Yet these lakeful rivers are still more exceedingly beautiful and impressive in their natural positions to those who have the eyes to see them as they lie imbedded in their meadows and forests and glacier-sculptured rocks.

When a mountain-lake is born—when, like a young eye, it first opens to the light—it is shy enough, comparatively few of the streams that approach the banks of rock and ice flow directly into it. They usually sink in the lower side, the rugged snout of a glacier on the upper. But this condition it remains for many a year, until at length, toward the end of some auspicious cluster of seasons, the glacier recedes beyond the upper inner barrier, giving it open free access to the sky for the first time, thousands of years after its basin-shaped floor was first scooped its basin. The landscape, cold and bare, is reflected in its pure depths; the winds ruffle its glassy surface, and the sun fills it with throbbing sparkles, while its waves begin to lap and murmur around its beautiful shores—sun-sparkles and stars in lonely flowers, the winds and the snow its only visitors. Meanwhile the glacier continues to recede, and numerous rills, still younger than the lake itself, bring down glacier-mud, small gravels and pebbles, giving rise to margin-rings and plats of soil. To these fresh soil-beds come many a bird and beast, first, hardy ones, with arching leaves and a few dull brown flowers; then, as the seasons grow warmer, and the soil-beds deeper and richer, other flowers, the more pointed places, and these are joined by blue gentians, daisies, dodecatheons, violets, honeyworts and many a lowly moss. Shrubs also hasten in time to the new gardens—kalmia, with its glossy leaves and purple flowers, the Arctic willow, making warm carpets, together with the healthy bryanthus and cassiope—the fairest and dearest of them all. Insects now enrich the air, frogs pipe cheerily in the shallows, and soon the mirror-lake, as the sedge is the first of plants.

So the young lake grows in beauty, becoming more and more insanely lovable from century to century. Groves of aspen spring up, and hardy pines, and the Williamson spruce, until at length every meadow and rock-bench, every drainage-hollow and moraine-ridge, is covered with a rich growth of trees, and the lake-basin is full to the brim. Then the forests press more closely around the lake, and the trees that can endure the cold best climb the highest mountains, and the lake is left to the sun and the winds, and the birds that sing and fly above its waters.

Sunstroke.

A writer in the London Times roughly estimates the capital of England in 1875 as follows: Invested in foreign loans, £1,000,000,000; invested in British railroads, £400,000,000; invested in the public funds, £800,000,000; invested in British industries, manufactures, mines, ships, etc., £2,000,000,000; land, £3,000,000,000—giving a total of £6,600,000,000; and the income of the working classes was estimated at £1,000,000,000. During the last five years the "shrinkage" has been considerable; in some cases the loss is actual, and will never be repaid; in others the shrinkage may diminish or it may increase. If the land it is only partial, but a fall in rents from 15 to 20 per cent. is to all reasonable appearances an absolute certainty. How, then, does the capital account stand in 1878? Loss (actual) on foreign loans, Peruvian, Honduras, Turkish, Egyptian, etc., £200,000,000; shrinkage in value of railway stock, 5 per cent., £250,000,000; shrinkage in value of British industries, from 25 to 50 per cent., from £750,000,000 to £750,000,000; in land from 15 to 20 per cent. from £400,000,000 to £600,000,000. Total loss or shrinkage in five years from £1,700,000,000 to £2,500,000,000. And in the meantime the earnings of the working classes have fallen off 25 per cent., or £200,000,000 annually. These figures are alarming.

—A mother, in Newark, N. J., left her infant child with its aunt for a few hours. The child went to sleep in the cradle. The aunt tied a cent to the door-knob and threw it over the child's neck, so that it could play with the string when it waked up. The child did play with it, and lifted itself out of the cradle, where it was found dead, having been strangled by the cord.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC BREVITIES.

—The following are mostly taken from the Iowa State Register:

The market can never be overstocked with good butter and cheese.

Theory without practice is of little avail. They must go hand in hand.

Oiled sawdust exposed to the sun will ignite by spontaneous combustion.

He is a good farmer who increases the aggregate of his crop each year.

To make farming pay, strive to get a little profit from every acre.

Hens like dark nests best; they avoid the light when selecting.

Let a man run five miles, then stop still in the cold zero wind for three hours, and he will appreciate the condition of a horse in the same situation.

Fresh wood ashes thrown into the dry nest of pigs will effectually rid it of vermin. If too much ashes, and the nests and pigs are wet, it will rid them of their hair also.

With the farmer, in his dealings with his domestic animals, as well as with his hired hands, there is one thing he should be placed as that he can always find it when needed—that is patience.

Earnestness of purpose can only spring from strong conviction, and if a farmer has not confidence in himself and his business, vacillation and doubt characterize his every action, and he is the sport of circumstances.

Never get into debt. A man who owes nothing can never fail.

Let every man who can do is able to buy a farm upon which to bring up his sons, do so. It is on the farm that the best men, morally and intellectually, are turned out.

Bear in mind that your business cannot be permanently prosperous unless you share its advantages equally with your customers. An all-turkey, all-buzzard system of business can never succeed in the long run. Each party to a transaction must be mutually benefitted if the trade is kept up.

Exercise your judgment and a scrimping policy with employes is not the most profitable for the employer. Live and let live is the better theory.

Never get your business so much extended that you are driven to take in a partner. If you engage in a partnership at all, let it not be forced upon you.

Large and Small Farms.

A fault of the Americans is to attempt to accomplish too much. Wealth or ambition leads us to make the effort to arrive at the end without the trouble of reaching it by carefully traversing the ground lying between it and the beginning. And yet there is only one way to accomplish a journey, whatever may be its nature, and that is to walk or ride the entire distance, and never skip a single foot of the way. This principle lies at the foundation of all real success. If duty in any particular be neglected, or if details are slighted, anything that may be thought success will only be a sham, and I will not be unlikely that complete and disastrous failure will result. A farmer who neglects a thousand acres will not be as successful as the one who thoroughly cultivates a hundred. He may, and no doubt will, have more grain when the harvest shall ripen, but when he attempts to calculate his profits, he must calculate them as per acre, and if the yield of his thousand acres is less per acre than the owner of the hundred acres has realized, his success, other things being equal, has not been as great as his neighbor's.

There has been an unfortunate tendency, in this country, to aspire to the possession of large plantations, or large farms. Especially is this true in the West, in many sections of which land is cheap, and the small cropping of which it is fertile. The ability of the soil to produce heavily, with even a limited cultivation, has stimulated the desire to plant and sow immense tracts. The results need not be told here. If the farms have been very large, failure has often been noted, and in many cases bankruptcy has been the final end. Of the number of large farmers that we have personally known dead, is those who cultivated extraordinarily large farms—we have not known a single successful one. In the majority of instances, the waste arising from neglected fruit and bad tillage convey it to the swamp.—H. D. Conoxy, in Cincinnati Commercial.

CAPT. JOHN, Chief of the Big Meadow Pintos, has a stock of a civilized person. Instead of spending his days in hunting at the Sink of Humboldt, which is literally alive with ducks, geese, swans and pelicans, Capt. John, according to the Winnemucca Silver State, employs a dozen Indians to shoot for him and coins money by selling the fowls at a dollar a head in Reveia.

THE Independent and Baptist ministers of Sheffield, Eng., have unanimously condemned the Afghan war as unrighteous, unpolitic and unchristian.

Milk, Butter, Cheese.

As in any other pursuit, the farmer desires to make the most money with the least labor and risk—at least to undergo as little labor and risk as possible. Sometimes he will abandon a mixed husbandry, in which he has been all his life profitably engaged, and convert his farm to dairy purposes alone; that is, producing milk for the city market or a cheese factory. This relieves the family of a great deal of labor and the farmer himself from much hard work and looking after. It is true he has his responsibilities with his cattle and the pastures and soiling crops; still it is a release from at least one-half of his labors. But in many cases—we think we can say in a majority of cases—he does not find it to pay nearly so well as the old system; that it becomes irksome from its sheer monotony; and that he does not feel that his position of a farmer is quite up to the mark. He becomes uneasy, and longs for the past life; and some day, after selecting from his stock of cattle a portion of the best of them, sells the rest off, and returns to the old farming and the good old way in which, though working harder, and requiring more patience and perseverance, he found his true position, his true happiness, as well as greater gains.

We know one farmer who have relinquished the mere routine profession of milk, and have resumed the old and more satisfying system of raising wheat and corn, rye and oats, a little buckwheat, an acre or two of potatoes, from ten to twenty acres of timothy if within reach of a market, clover for the cattle; a field of turnips and another of rutabagas; a half-dozen milkcows for the dairy, a half-dozen head of good cows from which to make butter; a dozen to fifty sheep for sale and for home consumption; a good span or two of working together with the usual other little matters and things making up the real business of a farmer who lives within reach of a ready market. Even in relation to the matter of butter alone, there are few who know how to make a first-class article, but who will admit that it is more profitable than to sell the milk.

As to cheese factories, these will be established only by men of capital, who are frequently not farmers at all, and, if well conducted, they will make a great deal of money; but unless they own the land and the cattle as a part of their business capital, the heavy profits will come from the farmer, who seeks to reduce the labor of his income at the same time, by what we regard only as an unfortunate change in the system of husbandry.—German-town Telegraph.

PUBLIC NOTICE.

I JOHN HANNAS, being a blacksmith by trade, but now confined to my house by reason of rheumatism, I could suffer from at the forge, so that I could work at a better advantage. This induced me to make many experiments with different substances which offered the best prospect of success. It was on one of these occasions that I discovered the wonderful properties of Electro Silicon as the finest Spavin.

I had a defect in three of my fingers, which were bent or shut up in my hand to such a manner, by the contraction of the muscles, that they were very much in the way in my daily avocation. I could not handle my tools as I wished, and often thought I would have my fingers cut off to get them out of the way. I have used everything that offered any hope of relief, but all to no effect. Well, I say, I was working with Electro Silicon at the forge, and of course could not prevent its coming in contact with my hands.

I took no notice of the effect it had produced, until one day, wishing to use a heavy hammer, I grasped with my crooked hand, and much to my surprise I found my crooked fingers straighten out, and I had as sound use of them as ever. I could hardly believe my eyes. I shewed my hands to my wife and family, and a general rejoicing was the result.

I am a resident living about a mile from my shop who had a horse knee, caused by the shoeb being contracted and drawing the knee out of shape. Electro Silicon was procured, and had him in use in three weeks' time, and at the end of three months he was able to go and ride his rate and walk to my shop apparently as well as ever. It had worked just as did in my case—producing a perfect cure. I gave it to many of my neighbors and friends (for miles around), who were suffering from Spavin, Ringbone, Splint, Curb, Sprains, Swellings, Stiffness, Lameness, and all kinds of horse troubles. Finding that the Electro Silicon Liniment would penetrate the skin of man further than any other substance, it occurred to me that it must be good for the human flesh, and I have used it in my family for all afflictions to all external diseases occurring to the human flesh. The Swedish Polar Expedition.

Two weeks ago we called attention to the promise of success awaiting Prof. Nordenskjold's Polar Expedition, which was to demonstrate that there was a northern navigable route from Norway to Japan, or, in other words, a northern passage from the Atlantic to the Pacific. A later dispatch, based on information furnished by whalers coming from the Arctic Ocean into the Pacific, reports the advance vessel in the ice at the culminating point of the voyage, and an expedition is to be started from Japan waters to the relief of the ice-bound vessel. After all there is promise of success, to be measured or modified, of course, by the conditions under which the latter part of the voyage has been accomplished.

Americans are more familiar with the attempts to penetrate the Arctic Ocean from Baffin's Bay, under the impulse to discover a northwest passage, or an open Polar Sea, than with those on the line on which the Swedish explorer has been operating. But there were early experiments in this direction as well as in the other. It was the ambition of the old Dutch navigators to discover a northwest passage to India, so as to counteract the influence of Spain on the Indian and Atlantic Oceans, and as early as 1594 Barentz had made a successful voyage along the northern coast of Asia, passing to the north of Nova Zembla. In 1596 he penetrated to Icy Cape, in Alaska. He had traveled the whole course, but his voyage did not afford much encouragement to commercial interests. In 1667 he sailed for the "open Polar Sea," going between Spitzbergen and Greenland. The next year, searching for a northeast passage, he made another voyage, passing between Nova Zembla and Spitzbergen. Before reaching the Trinity of North Cape, in Asia, he turned back, and devoted his efforts to the discovery of a northwest passage.

Since that date there has been a revolution in commercial affairs, lessening the importance of a northeast passage to India. But three great rivers of Northern Asia pour into the Arctic Ocean, and the development of the trade of these rivers—the Obi, the Yenisei and Lena, in connection with the commercial interests of Norway and Sweden, has given in recent years a new impulse to exploration along the Siberian coast. In 1875 Prof. Nordenskjold, of Sweden, advanced the theory that the practicable route to the mouths of the Obi and Yenisei was to the south of Nova Zembla, through the Kara Sea, as this was kept comparatively clear of ice during certain seasons of the year, by the river currents. He sailed from Hammerfest, near North Cape, in Europe, June 8, 1875, reached Nova Zembla in six days, crossed the Sea of Karn, and reached the mouth of the Yenisei Aug. 15. This unlocked the basins of the Obi, Irtisch and Yenisei to trade, and caused great excitement in Northern Europe.

Russian explorers, who had been endeavoring to reach the same points from Behring's Strait, took a new tack, and the Russian Government encouraged the Siberian explorer to continue his explorations along the Siberian coast. In 1876 Nordenskjold made a voyage in a steamer to the Yenisei, disposed of his cargo, and returned to Hammerfest, making the whole voyage in less than seven weeks. This was the beginning of a new era in Siberian trade, and Nordenskjold was ambitious to carry his explorations further, to open up trade with the Lena district as he had with the others, and to penetrate, if possible, to Behring's Strait, and thus open a new route to Japan and China.

The third expedition, under the auspices of the Swedish and Russian Governments, sailed from the Atlantic Ocean from Dudin's Bay, under the impulse to discover a northwest passage, or an open Polar Sea, thus

D. 1877, in Liber 2 of Mortgages, on page 222, which mortgage was assigned by the said Delos Pratt to William R. Sargent, on the 3d day of November, A. D. 1877, and the assignment thereof recorded in the office of the said Register of Deeds of Charlevoix county on the 12th day of November, A. THE carpenters of Charlevoix are anticipating lively times in building next season. Several of our citizens are figuring on new residences, numerous cottages at the resort will be erected, and one or more business buildings are contemplated.

—C. J. Wooden, Supervisor of Bear Lake Township, was in town yesterday.

MONEY TO LOAN on good real estate security, by A. A. Blonzby, Attorney at Law, Kalkaska, Mich. 16-1yr

CONGRESSMAN HUBBELL was reported lately to have been compelled by illness, to go home, but Washington advices say he is there and hard at work in framing the harbor and river bill.

THE discount on Canada money is partly attributable to the fact that our American banks cannot pay them out without incurring a tax of 10 per cent. under the United States revenue laws.

NILES was twice at one end of a "one-horse telegraph line." We shall write to the President of the Western Union Telegraph Co., and tell him about that. Niles must apologize.

THE ice harvest has commenced here. The ice is not so thick as is desirable, but the experience of last winter has taught Charlevoix people to "make hay while the sun shines." Ice six inches thick is better than none at all.

SENATOR BELL, of this District, is chairman of the committee on "Immigration," and is a member of the "Judicial Committee," of the committee on "Canals and River and Harbor Improvements," and the committee on "Expiring Laws." Representative Paulthorp is a member of the committees on "Judiciary," and "Public Lands."

COLD? Why, bless you, no. All the cold weather we experience here is in reading the weather reports from the frigid latitudes south of us. From all directions come tidings of extreme cold, the thermometer ranging as low as 20 and 40 degrees below zero. Even in Southern Kansas, that sunny land, they have had it 12 degrees below zero. In Charlevoix and the Pine Lake region at no time this winter has the mercury been below nine degrees above zero! Sell out down there and come up north into a milder climate!

A Justice of the Peace of Norwood Township has been invited by the Highway Commissioner of this Township to waltz up and settle his little bill of $15 for trotting his horses across the bridge. A lively time is anticipated. Some one must be made an example of. We note the considerable carelessness lately in driving across the bridge. Either have the law enforced, or take down the sign-boards.

The Sentinel vs. "The Courier."

From the Petoskey Record.

We have received the following communication from Mr. Niles, Supervisor of Springvale, relative to an article which appeared in the last number of the Charlevoix Sentinel:

The Charlevoix Sentinel, in a half-column article devoted to me, abounding in lungs and personalities, dubs me "The Orator." While I do not propose to retort by the same mode of warfare, which is neither gentlemanly, nor altogether in keeping with the legitimate province of a high-toned, moral editor, such as the Sentinel claims to be, I should be heartily glad to discuss the merits of any live question pertaining to the real interest of Charlevoix county, such as the removal of the county seat, the bridge question, or the reduction of the salaries of Charlevoix county officials, either publicly, or through the columns of the Sentinel. Mr. Smith, and the learned gentleman whose joint prominence in the "Orator" is, both take different views of these questions from myself, and exasperated by the efforts I make to honestly and faithfully represent the wishes of my constituent, resort to the tactics of the coward, blackguard, and pettifogger, to squelch me, not daring, from the weakness of their cause, to engage in a full, frank, and good natured discussion of those questions on their merits. W. C. NILES.

From the Petoskey Democrat.

As the thing that sits at one end of a one horse telegraph wire, distributes mail to the people of Charlevoix, and edits the largest lumbing in Michigan, swells up like a big blow snake, and scatters his low dirty slang broadcast for the express purpose of injuring any and every one who dares to speak in defense of right, I ask the privilege of saying through your columns that hereafter I don't propose to take any notice of his dirt throwing. But if the editor of the Sentinel or any other person of Charlevoix wishes to come to the front, and discuss the questions that interest the taxpayers of Charlevoix county, in a gentlemanly way, we are ready to meet him in public face to face, or through the press, otherwise we shall leave him to dig the death of those who use slang for argument.

Ed of Sentinel please copy.

W. C. NILES.

One newspaper not being deemed sufficient to contain the brain-work of the great agitator, the columns of two are secured. As a double-barreled air-gun Niles is a success. Now, we never censured Mr. Niles, nor any of his colleagues for voting as they thought the interests of their respective sections demanded, neither shall we. We only retorted when Mr. Niles heaped abuse upon Charlevoix alone, when five or six other Townships were equally as deserving of his diatribes. And that which he considered blameworthy was the exercise of the same privileges that he claimed for himself and his followers. He wishes to have a fair, frank, good-natured discussion of the questions at issue!!! Shades of Moses! If fairness, frankness or good nature characterized his conduct on those matters this controversy would not have occurred. The opposite of these traits has marked his course on the Board since he became a member of it. "The biggest humbug in Michigan." Yes. About the time we called Mr. Niles an orator the SENTINEL was the oldest and best journal in the two counties, and its editor a gentleman and a scholar. We had Mr. Niles' word for this. As for the discussion to which he challenges us, there is only one question which we care to discuss with Mr. Niles, and that is a little matter of debit and credit on our ledger which has his name at the head of the page.

FIVE degree below zero at Petoskey on the 15th. Five degrees above zero at Charlevoix the same day.

MR PAULTHORP recently gave notice in the House of Representatives that he would introduce a bill for the incorporation of the village of Petoskey.

THE Traverse Bay Eagle has flopped again. It puts itself on record in the Michigan Almanac for 1879 as "Independent." The Nationals of Grand Traverse now have no organ.

A bill has been introduced in the Legislature to compel non residents to procure a license for using nets for fishing.

Han Sanscript Recalled Recollections of Fifty Years Ago.

The boys were coasting down Sycamore-street Hill, last evening, when John Sanscript and his wife came along. They had been up on Bolt-more street visiting, and were on their way home.

"Just see them boys," said John, as he braced up at the intersection of Mulberry street. "It really reminds me of the days when I was a lad. Do you know, Jane, that I used to coast down hill on a sled then a-way?"

"Did you, John?"

"Why, yes; but that's fifty years ago."

Sanscript scratched his head contemplatively, and then muttered, sotto voce:

"Durn my grand-daddy's buttons, if I don't try it!"

"Try what, dear?" anxiously asked Mrs. S.

"I'm going to coast just once, to revive recollections of fifty years ago."

"Now, John, if I warn you——"

"But you are not me, an don't interfere. Here, sonny (to a lad just puffed up the hill with his sled); here, sonny, I'll give you a quarter to let me slide down on your sled once."

The bargain was eagerly nailed and clinched.

"Be keerful, old man," urged the boy, as Sanscript squatted rather awkwardly on the sled; "be keerful, I say, and don't let that ere feller run over you."

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Jan. 17, 1879.

EDITOR SENTINEL

New York has discovered a trio of young heroes, under the leadership of a lad known as "Nan, the Newsboy." They have made it their business to save the lives of those who, willingly or unwillingly, have found themselves in the waters about our docks. Like Topsy, Nan seems to have "growed." He appears to have burst upon the community at a bound, as a full blown hero, and to have constituted himself and his two companions a life-saving service. After the work of the day is over they devote their time to his human and entirely self imposed task. With rubber boots, cork belts, life-lines, and lanterns, they patrol the dangerous and unprotected portions of the wharves, guarding drunken sailors from tumbling over the low springpiece, or plunging into the water when too late to prevent a fall.

This homely devotion to the good of humanity has not been permitted to go unnoticed. The newspapers have taken the matter up, and it looks now as though the boys would have a substantial recognition of their services in the shape of funds with which to carry out "Nan's" pet idea—the establishment of a service in good and regular standing. Captain Paul Boynton, the inventor of the life-saving armor suit, has taken a great fancy to Nan and his comrades, and gave them an invitation to dine with him at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. It must have been a hunter thing for the brave young fellows to face the grotesqueness of the fashionable hotel, than to have leaped into the icy waters of the bay; but with oysters, soups, fish, entrees, roasts, game, and dessert, twenty-year-old hunger got the better of shyness, as well as of the viands. "Now, lads, sit down anywhere and make yourselves at home," said their host. "Gentlemen," said Nan, "this here is Gilbert Long, and that's Edward Kelly," and then the deatruction began. "Have a little light wine Nan?" "No it would raise me head; we're all temperance." As the dinner proceeded, vests were unbuttoned, and collars gave way under the strain. Nan told a story about a woman who was determined to jump off one of the piers. "I ketched her by the back hair just as she was throwing herself over the stringpiece. Then she tried to scratch me 'I've lost all my money and all my tidings,' said she, 'and I don't want to live any longer.' I see she was as full as a tick, and says I, 'You've kept away from the water up to now, and I guess you can keep away awhile longer.'" "When I'm grabbled aroond the neck by a man in the water, I helps him over the ear, and if that don't make him let go, then I belt him in the nug. That always fetches him." With a man's heart in the right place the relative positions of subjects and predicates, and the somewhat shaky use of the English language in general, fall to the background as matters of no importance.

The cost of organizing the corps contemplated by Nan, together with the furnishing of three stations at different points along the river front, will be about $800, and the cost of keeping up the service about $2,000 a year. Already the open handed brokers of Wall Street have subscribed enough to ensure the success of the scheme. The boys have received little or no reward for their unselfish devotion. It is a well-known fact that a rescued person expresses little gratitude for his deliverance. Captain Boynton says that if you want a man to scold you ever after, lend him $10 or save his life.

Since June last, Nan has saved fifteen lives; Long, six; and Kelly, two, and as their labors are among those from whom no reward could be expected, the work is the result of a conscientious desire to serve the cause of humanity; and if a little romantic excitement come in as one cause of keeping up his service, no one will think the less of it, or hold back his hearty plaudits for the good work done, or his best wishes and assistance for the future of Nan, the Newsboy's life saving corps.

New York policemen, with all their faults, have one strong point. They regally uphold the dignity and majesty of the law as embodied in themselves. A couple of these noble creatures are now up before the Police Commissioners, to whom it has been clearly shown, on the testimony of a score of witnesses that they nearly clubbed to death a man who ventured to remonstrate against his unexpected and causeless arrest. During their examination, one of the offending peelers admitted that he didn't know what they arrested the man for, and that he only clubbed him as a matter of form. On the same evening, and just before the exploit mentioned, the same worthy pair had collared an old man "on suspicion," and told him they would let him go if he would stand treat, which he accordingly did. It is rather more than possible that these two valuable clubs will be lost to the force hereafter, and that these over-vigilant guardians of the peace will be retained to pursue lice, when they can club their fellow-men only on equal terms and at the risk of serving their country in the penitentiary.

The sugar agitation still continues likely hereabouts. The emeutes of the refiners finding themselves beginning to lose ground in the public estimation, are making the most strenuous exertions to obtain credence for their stories of fraud and adulteration. Last Monday night there was a mass meeting at Chickering Hall, which they had previously called, and at which their ringleader, "the man named Fuller," whom I mentioned in a recent letter on this subject, made a violent speech denouncing the refiners, and urging the same old charges, which have been repeatedly discredited. It was here's labor lost for the Cubans, however, for not only did the audience openly resent the absurd harangue, but Hon. David A. Wells, who was present, and who had been especially abused by Mr. Fuller, came forward and made a speech setting forth the real facts in the case, and refuting the slanders against himself and against the refiners, in such a way that the antagonists of the latter were placed in a worse shape than ever.

The Fifth Avenue Theatre, which has for years been the leading theatre in New York in the production of society dramas, has been unceremoniously closed on account of dissensions in its management and lack of funds with which to pay its company and orchestra; and a receiver has been appointed to close out its affairs. The catastrophe occurred one evening during Jeo Jefferson's engagement. The eminent Rip Van Winkle was dressed for his part, and a good-sized audience was assembled in the house, when the actors and actresses unanimously struck for their back pay, and as they obstinately declined to take soft words and fair promises in lieu thereof, the impatient audience had to be told that there would be no performance, but that they could get their money back at the door. Thus closed in disgrace, for a time, at any rate, the career of one of the most brilliant and apparently successful places of amusement in the country. It remains to be seen how soon a manager will be found courageous enough to attempt to coax back its former prestige.

In the theatrical line there is nothing else particularly startling, unless it be the attack which is just commencing on the so-called "sacred" concerts, which have recently so multiplied, especially at low resorts, as to make Sunday even in New York about the most disorderly and immoral time of the week. A movement to suppress the annoyance is now getting under way. In the way of other amusements there is the continuance of Madame Anderson's attempt to walk 2,700 quarter miles in the same number of quarter hours. She is now nearing the end of her task, and at this writing seems sure of success. She thought perhaps not as much as the $24,000 of gate-money which the O'Leary-Campana match attracted to the Hippodrome. She seems to be a versatile little woman, stopping her walk now and then to make a speech to her audience, or to sit down at a piano which she has near the track to sing and play for their delectation. At Gilmore's Garden, Captain Bogardus, of shot-gun fame, has done some good shooting this week, breaking 6,000 glass balls with only thirteen misses. The shooting occupied two days, during the first of which he broke his 3,000 without a single miss. Bogardus and Dr Carver are expected to shoot an exciting match here before long.

RADIX.

Perhaps by this time, Fitz John Porter wishes he hadn't called for further investigation.

Caleb Cushing told Edwin M. Stanton that the heart of Charles A. Dana was a bag of gall.

"Rather than touch another drop of liquor," said a zealous convert at a temperance meeting at Alton, Ill., the other night, "I would take a razor and blow out my brains."

An experienced Muskegon lumberman predicts that common lumber will sell as low as $6 per thousand feet next year, if the present indications of an unusual large crop are realized.

Stanley Matthews, who has been to Memphis, comes back laden with the report that the renomination of President Hayes is the only thing the people thereaway could hear to.

At Capt. Louttet's shipyard, in Grand Haven, there are three new crafts to be built this winter, a tug and a vessel and a propeller. He has declined to undertake the building of still another propeller.

The Louisville Journal says Gen. Grant should be placed on the retired list where Fillmore, Pierce and Buchanan were placed. This is a feeble echo of the rebel yell which Grant smothered in 1865.

The floundering and flopping of the Democratic suckers, in endeavoring to explain in their papers how resumption happens to be successful in spite of their opposition, is regarded as one of the affecting spectacles of the hour.

Probably one of the most remarkable suicides on record was that of Mrs. Corbin, of Leroy, Osceola county. She took an apron string, placed it about her neck, took an end in each hand, and deliberately pulled in opposite directions, choking herself to death, falling on her face in the snow.

The Legislature in New York, which will meet at Albany next Tuesday, to take possession of the new fifteen million dollar State capitol building—and it isn't quite finished yet—will be the 1024 legislature of that State. Its first principal business will be the reelection of Mr. Conkling to the United States Senate.

The Governor of Wisconsin, in his annual message, estimates that the tramps, by their contributions levied upon individuals and communities, cost the people of Wisconsin nearly as much as all their State taxes. If this estimate is approximately correct, it is no wonder he recommends vigorous legislation to rid Wisconsin of the tramp nuisance.

During the burning of the Chicago postoffice Saturday Gen. Sheridan entered the building despite proclamations, and while the firebrands were falling about him, placed such documents as he could reach into vaults, and dashed into fresh air just in time to avoid the falling plastering and scantlings. It is believe that all the papers bearing on the Schurz controversy were saved.

While some men were at work in the woods near Flint a few days since felling trees, their curiosity was excited by the rattle of chains as the tree struck mother earth. Upon examining the tree a large iron trap with a heavy chain was found about thirty feet from the butt, and the chain running almost exactly through the center of the trunk, firmly imbedded in the solid wood. The tree, which is one of good size in proportion to its height, was sawed off on either side of the chain, and will be preserved as a relic.

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, if you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Gen. W. Chester, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

General News Summary.

FORTY-FIFTH CONGRESS—SECOND SESSION.

A LARGE number of petitions were presented in the Senate, on the 7th, many from women, asking that effect be given to the Anthony amendment of 1867, and others protesting against the so-called "Patent Law" bill, and against the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. Bills were introduced for the interchange of exchange coin and United States notes, to authorize the taxation of unsterling legal tenders; to authorize local taxation of United States notes. Mr. Edmunds offered a resolution declaring that, on the part assigned to the Senate in the fifteenth Fourteenth and fifteenth articles of the Constitution have been legally ratified, and are as valid as the other parts of the Constitution. Also as to the right and duty of Congress to enforce such amendments by appropriate legislation, and the duty of the Executive to respect legislation, and the duty of the Executive to respect to battlefields and impartially execute such laws, and the duty of Congress to appropriate money to that end; and instructing the Judiciary Committee to report a bill for the protection of the rights of citizens and the punishment of infractions thereof. The pension bill was laid on the table, at the request of Mr. Edmunds, to be called up hereafter. In the House, bills were introduced—to include newspapers, periodicals and pamphlets in mail matter of the third class; for the admission of Dakota as a State, extending the time in preemption on public lands who have suffered by punishment. By the House, to transfer the charges of gross misconduct and corruption against Judge Hodgson, of the District Court for Northern Illinois, and instructing the Judiciary Committee to investigate the charges. Official conduct was adopted. The deaths of Messrs. Hooper, of Virginia, and Williams, of Michigan, were announced and the House, in respect to their memory, adjourned.

In the Senate, on the 8th, Mr. Grover, rising to a personal explanation, denied the charges made against him relative to the misappropriation of the public funds of Oregon while Governor of that State. The business of the session was interrupted for a message from the House announcing the death of Representative Hooper, of Virginia. Other Senators were appointed to accompany the body of the deceased to the train. The Senate then adjourned. In the House, official notice of the death of Kerr was received. Harrison was taken as a mark of esteem was appended to accompany the remains to Detroit. The House then adjourned.

A LARGE number of petitions were presented in the Senate, on the 9th, many of them being in favor of the Bell coasting arrears of expenses. The Indian Appropriation bill was reported back from committee with amendments, and, on motion of Mr. Saulsbury, the amendments were agreed to. Adjourned from the House to attend the funeral of the late Representative Harrington. Mr. Hooper, of the House, a resolution was adopted that the remains of the late Mr. Harrington should lie in state in the rotunda, and inviting Senators to attend. Several resolutions were presented. A large number was present during the funeral ceremonies.

A BILL was introduced and referred in the Senate, on the 10th, to provide for additional relief to the soldiers of the War of the Rebellion. The Indian Appropriation bill was amended and passed. Adjourned to the 13th. In the House, Mr. Cannon, of Illinois, an existing statute concerned on the Wilson and Bare College bill, and which appears to the House, the bill was rejected—yeas, 87, nays, 127 (a number of Democrats voting against opposed, and also Republicans). On the negative. The bill appropriated $60,000 as a contingent fund for the designation, during the war, of the Military and Navy College in Virginia, and has been pending in Congress for a number of years.

THE Senate was not in session on the 11th. After the reading of the journal in the House the death of Representative Hooper, of Texas, was announced, and a committee of seven appointed to accompany the remains to Texas. The House then adjourned as a further mark of respect.

BUT little business was transacted in the Senate, on the 13th. An invitation from the House to attend the funeral of the late Representative Schleicher was accepted. A committee was appointed to accompany the remains to Texas. In the House, the galleries were filled with people, and at the appointed time the Diplomatic Corps, Cabinet officers, and Supreme Court Judges entered the hall, and the Funeral services over the body of the late Mr. Hooper were read by the Chaplains of the House and Senate, after which the remains of the deceased were removed to the depot, whence they would be sent to Sid Antonio, Texas.

DOMESTIC.

IN Washington, on the 9th, Charles Thompson, principal chief of the Cherokee Nation, and several delegates from that tribe, and also from the Creek and Chickasaw, called on President Hayes. Chief Thompson and P. Porter, of the Creeks, made brief speeches, stating that their people were in a prosperous condition, and were opposed to the transfer of the Indian Bureau to the War Department. In the reply the President said the points presented by the delegations were being considered by the Government, and that, so far as he was concerned, he would do all he could to have the views and wishes of the Indians carried out. Above all, he would see that the treaties with the Indians should be faithfully observed by the Government. Secy. Schurz, Commissioner Hunt and Inspector Hammond were present during the interview.

SPECIAL telegrams from Camden, N. J., giving an account of the baseball there, on the 10th, of Benjamin Hunter, for the murder of John M. Armstrong, report the conviction to have been a fearfully-prolonged affair. The victim died a most horrible death. One account says: "Surrounded by many drinking whisky from flasks, and smoking the most tobacco, he was actually strangled to death by two herculean brutes, who seized the man (the weight: hardly proved insufficient to suspend the body), and swayed the body back and forth as if taking delight in their work. The place was turned into a holiday parade, and there was no solemnity about the scene."

DURING the night of the 9th, the Cheyennes murdered Capt. Stephenson, Lieb., reveled, shot down the guard and made their escape into the surrounding darkness. Troops immediately followed in pursuit, and of the fleeing savages thirty-five were recaptured, thirty killed and as many more or less wounded. About thirty were missing on the evening of the 10th. One soldier was killed and four wounded.

MONEY to loan on good real estate security, by A. A. Bleadly, Attorney at law, Kalkaska, Mich. 15-1yr

MONEY to LOAN, on good real estate security. Inquire of A. E. Upright, Charlevoix, Mich. 16 1yr.

PROSPECTS for the growth of Charlevoix the coming summer are very promising. Several building schemes are being worked up which have good prospects of success, and which will constitute a giant stride in the development of Charlevoix

THE Rev. Wm. Carleton Irish, a traveling Missionary for the Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints, (Mormon,) held forth at the school house on Thursday and Friday evening of last week. He is a preacher of considerable ability, and of excessive zeal in more directions than one. His audiences were good, and he was listened to with respectful attention. He is an unmarried man, is opposed to polygamy, but a very moderate amount of coaxing would induce him to enter a condition of monogamy.

LEADING farmers of the northern portion of Antrim county, who live at a distance of twelve and fourteen miles from Charlevoix, say that this place is an nothing almost the entire trade of that section. The reasons for this are obvious. It is the most natural outlet for all the surplus products of that comparatively well developed section. The same may be said of all the farming country which is tributary to Charlevoix. Our harbor, and our location upon the main thoroughfare of navigation, furnish our merchants excellent facilities for cheap transit from Chicago, Milwaukee and lower lake markets, and, on the other hand makes this the most natural point of transfer for all the surplus products of the country. As these products increase in quantity, facilities for handling them must be increased accordingly, and will be. Where farmers can dispose of their products to the best advantage, and buy goods the cheapest, there will they establish their market, both for sale and purchase. All things point to Charlevoix as the principal base of distribution for this region, as plainly as the dial indicates the time of day.

RAILROAD RUMORS.

Talk About Extending the Lake Shore Road Up This Way:

It is rumored that an effort will soon be made to extend the Lake Shore Railroad from its present terminus northward to little Traverse. In fact the subject is being talked up enthusiastically down in Muskegon county, from what we learned the other day from a gentleman from Grand Rapids. It is well known that the shipping interests all along the shore are enormous. It would seem that Manistee alone would keep a railroad pretty busy transporting lumber from our large mills, especially in winter. This would, of course, make a long line of road, and a very pleasant one, too, before. Now then, we should like to hear what the people of Manistee, Traverse, City, Elk Rapids, Charlevoix, Petoskey and other towns on the route have to say. Speak out.—Little Traverse Republican.

We have always considered the extension of the Lake Shore Railroad as only a matter of a few years. The many thriving towns along the shore north of its present terminus, with their rapidly increasing commerce, must inevitably call that road this way. With its splendid harbor and inland navigation, Charlevoix would be the most advantageous terminus.

ESCAPED AND CAPTURED.—Henry Mouse, who was in durance vile at Cheboygan, for "irregular conduct" was released by a party of his friends one night last week, and left for parts unknown. He was well advertised, however, and was recaptured at Clam Lake and returned to his imprisonment at Cheboygan.

THE Bears property, to this village, which has been so long in probate, will soon be cut up into suitable business lots and disposed of to the highest bidder. Several of our business men are watching this property with a jealous eye, and it will no doubt soon after its sale be covered with business establishments. The location is one of the best in the village.

TUNNEL TRAVEL.—Mr. Bartholomew, while outside, will visit the President of the Grand Rapids and Indiana Rail road Company, and endeavor to effect an arrangement whereby passengers on their road can be ticketed through to Charlevoix via Boyne Falls and Pine Lake. If the Railroad Company concluded to enter into the project, a daily stage will be placed on the route between Boyne Falls and Boyne, and by this means a through line of travel established.

A BIG ENTERPRISE.—The Traverse City papers are full of news regarding another scheme of that wide awake firm, Hannah, Lay & Co., of Traverse City This firm proposes, in a word to bring their unbounded resources and great energy into the work of making Traverse City a leading Northern Michigan resort. They have leased the Campbell House for a term of five years, and will, in the spring erect a number of cottages near that house, for the accommodation of health and pleasure seekers. They are overhauling their large steamer City of Traverse, and will make her in all respects second to none that floats Lake Michigan. She will make weekly trips between Traverse City and Chicago, and after July 1st, will make weekly excursions to Mackinaw remaining there one day, affording tourists an opportunity to "do" the island in an inexpensive sort of a manner.

We have already spoken in these columns of the new steamer being built by Hannah, Lay & Co., for the Traverse City and Petoskey route. This steamer together with their other two, will afford a means of travel at once convenient and inexpensive. Of course it will be successful.

THE River and Harbor bill is nearly completed. The committee are working at it daily. The amounted is between $5,000,000 and $6,000,000. The amount asked for by the Chief of Engineers for Charlevoix Harbor is $50,000.

INCIDENTS AND ACCIDENTS.

—A resident of Washington, Ky., took a vow that if ever he got drunk again he would whip himself all the way home from the tavern. He got drunk, and fulfilled his vow with such vigor that he could not stir out of bed for two weeks.

—Three tourists undertook to walk behind Niagara Falls a few days ago. The danger is great in winter, owing to the ice. One of the trio, in picking his way over the slippery path, ran against a huge icicle, which broke off and fell on him. He was badly cut, and has since been insane, but whether from a blow on the head or from fright is not settled.

—Miss Annie L. Elliott, a young lady of Marlboro, Mass., having died very suddenly re cently, three of the resident physicians held a post mortem examination on her body, and found a large piece of lemon peel lodged in the esophagus. A number of large pieces of the same substance were found in the stomach, having been swallowed at different times during the week, and not been digested. The nervous prostration and congestion caused by these substances brought about her death.

—The following painful story is reported from the Village of St. Antoine de Tilly, in Canada. A middle-aged bachelor of the place, named Moise La Borte, who lived alone and led an exemplary life, not having been seen about for a few days, the neighbors broke in the door of his house, a terrible spectacle meeting their gaze. La Borte sat in his chair, life having evidently left him several days before. The flesh of his face and other portions of his body had been almost entirely gnawed off by rats, which, as the intelligent compositor could have twisted into "Bloody Bull-dozer of Calvary Church," we exceedingly regret, etc., etc. "In our editorial last week on the Ann Arbor University," explains the Ingopolis True Banner, "the intention was to allude to the 'internal dissensions' and not to the 'infernal dissections,' as the proofreader imagined." "I want you to understand," writes an awfully mad correspondent of the Badgertown Argus, "that I quoted the beautiful Sanscrit line, 'Swat oggerd ei,' and not 'Root hog or die,' as your paper printed it. Why don't you hire some one who can read proof?" And thus it goes, without anyone giving very much thought to the horrible aggregation of pestrokes that make up the mass of printers' copy. Writing of every conceivable design, from the neat copy of the first manuscript to the hieroglyphic scrawl of the old stager in journalism, all dumped on the unfortunate shoulders of the "comp." or proofreader. And yet mistakes in a good newspaper are very rare. Still a man has never been known to come to a newspaper office and say: "that letter of mine was admirably printed, not a mistake in the whole column;" but it is quite a common thing to have a man with red face and angry shout: "Heavens and earth, what kind of a paper do you print, anyhow, I wrote '59' and it came out 'the this morning,'" and then he mops his heated brow in agony. Column and column of correct matter are forgotten, and the one mistake stands out in gigantic proportions. The Free Press has a compositor who frequently mutters his thoughts aloud as he works at the case. Last week a peculiarly detestable piece of "copy" fell to his share, and, after he had settled in his own mind which was the top, he growled: "Sometimes I think we must have lived another life before, and that this life must be perdition, and this copy the hottest corner of it." There are two sides or this "intelligent compositor" business.—Detroit Free Press.

Fashion Notes.

Black satin opera cloaks are now fashionable.

Buttons for suits are of wood with small paintings on them. Each button has a different design on it.

The lucky horseshoe has become a wedding favor, appearing in wedding invitations the cards admitting guests to the church are made in the shape of a horseshoe.

Delicate shades of pale pink and light green come in the gauzes which are used for evening dresses, and are much favored for dinner dresses for young ladies.

Alsatian bows for the hair or bonnet are now made of plain velvet or velveteen, instead of ribbon; the edges are rolled, and a thin wire is sometimes inserted to give stiffness.

Square-cut waists cut low and trimmed with standing ruches of lace, somewhat in the Marie de Medicis shape, are used for young girls' dresses; nearly all are low neck with short sleeves.

Silvered flowers interspersed with colored bows are worn on white dresses. Narrow ribbons with silver embroidered among the brightest flowers are also used in many-looped bows on the sides of thin dresses.

Flowers are worn in the shape of "cache-peignes," or else a band of pearls or of gilt encircles the head just in front of the chignon, and small bunches of flowers are worn at the side and at the top of the narrow octagon braids or curls.

For winter hat trimmings the cachenirer ribbons with gold thread embroidered in them are more used than almost any other ribbons. "Multicolored" gauze, called "mosaique," is also employed, and ribbons and gauzes with Scotch plaids are popular.

The newest walking-boots for ladies are made of "shagreen;" it is the fashion with short directoria dresses to wear thick-soled boots with the uppers made of some very heavy material.

Very young girls of twelve or fourteen years of age wear the hair in two long Swiss braids tied with ribbons to match the dress; for full dress a little bunch of flibs-of-the-valley or roses and forget-me-nots are worn on one side of the head. Older girls wear the hair in rolled curls turned up at the back, thus forming a low chignon, at the side of which is worn a bunch of flowers.

When Chambory and other gauzes are used for evening dresses, or crepe tissues, it will be found a pretty variety to make them up with diagonal plaitings on the apron front and the sides. The plaits should only be pressed in, not sewed; and then held in place by groups of ruffles or ruches set on also diagonally across the front of the dress. Ruffles in these materials should not be hemmed but doubled. Thus many plaits are made and how fine either of of the same piece of material. White satin loops are laid between the ruffles.

Owing to the fashion of using ruches as trimmings, tartlan is used again for the dresses of very young ladies; it is always used with silk slips. A dress of blue silk can be freshened by having a finely-plaited apron draped at the sides under full ruches made in the chicoree style, very thickly plaited; these are mingled with puffings of tartlan. The train is trimmed up for some distance with finely-plaited double ruffles, set in groups bound by the chicoree ruches; above this is the drapery of tartlan, held in place by bands of marguerites.

Young girls of twelve or thirteen years of age wear evening dresses of white India cachemire, trimmed with blue silk and white lace. The waist is low and square, and is cut in the shape of a blouse which buttons in the back; the front is plaited in a full shape. The skirt is trimmed with a plaited flounce, headed by a bias band of silk and a ruffle of lace. A dress of light-colored cashmere or delaine is made to simulate a polonaise by having plaited lace set on it. Where the two meets down the front bows of ribbon are put on. The waist is low and is edged all round with plaited lace; on the shoulders just above the short sleeves are bows.

Many pretty styles of hats are made for skating or street wear of velvet, edged with chenille or fur, and in some are made entirely of the best feathers of the peacock. The several shapes worn however all vary, but one is the "bonnet de poltee," and is meant for a very young face; another is the Parisian hat, and another the Russian toque. The last two are copies of National headgear. The Henri II toque in velvet or plush, or made of the same material as the costume, and a soft crown with one or two plaits; it has no brim, but there is a long plume and one end passes under the other and is caught in the wool, or steel pins, in stripes of red and white. Lace over silk is very pretty for a counterpane.

Here, again, is an opportunity for the juvenile furnishers to exercise a little neat needlework.

A capital wardrobe can be made of another such box, without the lid. It should be lined inside with pink or white glazed calico, and covered outside with paper. Imitation oak panelling looks best. Stand this on one end, pit a row of brat pins at the back, inside, for the dolls to hang their dresses on, and clue the entrance by a piece of some soft material (crimson flannel or morning dress well).

The curtain should be made to draw to and fro; this is easily managed by running a wire through a row of loops at the back of the curtain, and shoving it across the door. If made in a soft material (silk is too harsh), it will draw easily.

Tables and chairs can be made in cardboard, but they are hardly durable enough to be suitable for the doll's house. In the family contains a fortune with any taste for carpentry, he had better be applied to. Tables and chairs are easily made, even by amateur carpenters. If done neatly, it will be sufficient to paint the legs and back to imitate whatever wood is desired—varnishing it as a sticky and smelly operation, and hardly one to be recommended to young folks who have any regard for their own frocks or their parents carpets.

Extremely pretty chairs can be made by covering the wood with strong gum, and then laying cut straw regularly side by side upon it till the chair is covered. Sofas without arms can be made out of an empty book-and-eyes box; turn the box bottom upward to form the seat, sew a piece of card against one side to form the back, and cover the back and seat first with a thin layer of wadding, then with silk, velvet or chintz.

A doll's house, such as described, is a toy in which all the children can take an interest, even the boys being useful in making it. Where such a toy is known to exist, friends and relatives who wish to make presents to the little ones generally let their gifts take the shape of some addition to the doll's house, which often grows surprisingly rich in the course of years. Glass and crockery, which cannot be made at home like the furniture, are frequently supplied in this manner. I omitted to mention a wash-stand among the bedroom furniture; a table does well for this, the top covered with a thin white oilcloth or marble paper. A toilet table should be covered with pink calico and draped white muslin, to match the bed.

Ingenious children will invent many other additions to the furniture. Of course it may be said that toy furniture is to be bought so cheaply that it is hardly worth the trouble of manufacturing at home; but the object of this paper is rather to find occupation for restless little fingers than to give instructions how to make articles which shall eclipse the gorgeous doll's furniture at my first-class toy shop. Doubtless prettier tables and chairs can be bought, but the hand-made ones gives amusement for many a wet afternoon, and their manufacture fills up many an idle hour.

Our Young Readers.

"HOLD FAST ALL I GIVE YOU."

We were all in our cosy parlor,
On a chill, rainy day;
And the few little folks were playing
At sports an odd play?
I think I saw "hide-the-thimble,"
Though to me it was new;
But this they said, over and over—
"Hold fast all I give you!"

It sounded to me like the twitter
Of a merry flock of birds,
When makes a continuous chatter
Like the sound of soft words,
And though I appeared to be writing,
Yet I watched it all through;
Each one taking turn with this whisper—
"Hold fast all I give you!"

They were quiet as mice in a cupboard—
So eager, intent,
From the little one, then another,
Round the small circle went;
Palms clasped, as if 'twas a treasure
They were hiding from view,
As for each one the order was given—
"Hold fast all I give you!"

Since then, when I'm teaching the children,
I, too, think it best
Seems dull, or the lesson before them
Is tiresome or grim,
And I have a trouble to make things
Look very pale,
I say to the little ones sharply
"Hold fast all I give you!"

Then I show them how trying will help them.
To find the right way
And the spirit to work so easy
And pleasant so play.
They are willing and bright; for at lessons
They need but a clew;
So they know what I mean, when I tell them
"Hold fast all I give you."

HOME-MADE DOLLS' HOUSE.

AS MANY young readers are not in a position to expend any very large amount for toys, the following suggestions, which are gathered from the Philadelphia Times, may be of service, and help to make the long winter evenings pass pleasantly.

A large packing case, divided into four compartments by two shelves placed crossways inside, makes an excellent dolls' house. Any carpenter would fix these shelves and put on a door in front at a very small charge. The four compartments make a dining-room, drawing-room, kitchen and bedroom. The ceilings should be covered with white glazed calico, pasted on; this can be had in imitation of white wash. Pale yellow calico pasted on the kitchen walls answers for the usual "distempering" of a real kitchen; this is less troublesome than painting or applying real whitewash, and looks quite as well. The calico must be stretched as tightly as possible. The walls of the other rooms should be covered with paper. Carpets can be made out of pieces of velvet, or, better still, worked on canvas in a small pattern suitable to the room. This is a capital piece of easy work for a little girl. One great advantage is, the dolls' house as a toy is that, like a doll, it induces children to practice needle-work. Red carpet looks well on the floor of the dining-room, but dragget does not look amiss. Small pictures, cut out of papers or taken off bonbons, look well on the walls if surrounded by a narrow strip of gilt paper to imitate a frame.

Much of the furniture can be made at home. Beds are easily manufactured. Take an old note-paper or spool-box, and place the lid upright against one end, the box being turned bottom upward. This forms a bed, with a bed and tester. Sew the lid firmly in its place, and paste pink glazed calico within and without, also along the sides; the cover with white muslin edged with lace, arranged like the curtains of a four-poster, and valance of a real bed. A mattress, stuffed with any scraps of wool or wadding, sheets (handkerchiefs of flannel), counterpane and bed clothes can be added. Silk patchwork is effective for the counterpane, or one can be knitted in fine wool, or even pina, in stripes of red and white. Lace over silk is very pretty for a counterpane.

Here, again, is an opportunity for the juvenile furnishers to exercise a little neat needlework.

A capital wardrobe can be made of another such box, without the lid. It should be lined inside with pink or white glazed calico, and covered outside with paper. Imitation oak panelling looks best. Sofas without arms can be made out of an empty book-and-eyes box; turn the box bottom upward to form the seat, sew a piece of card against one side to form the back, and cover the back and seat first with a thin layer of waddiug, then with silk, velvet or chintz.

Why New Yorkers Wear Out Early.

Several of our leading doctors give it as their opinion that no man who takes his own life is in his right mind. It is also agreed that the style of living in New York and the style of doing business predisposes a man to that morbid condition that induces him to take his life. The rush, the drive and excitement are almost continuous. Men who are good for anything leave their hands full and their heads full. The brain is like a hot-box on a railroad train—only you hold up on the train, and they don't on the street. There's hardly a prominent man doing business in the Stock Exchange who has not work enough on hand for half a dozen men. As an illustration: The President of one of our leading banks has been under the doctor's care for over a year. He comes down to the bank every morning, and remains till five p. m. Beside the immense business of his own institution, at eleven o'clock he goes down to Wall street, where he is a silent partner in a stock house. At one he is back again at the bank. His private office is crowded with prominent business men of New York. He has at least six institutions in which he is a Manager, a Director or President. These institutions represent every variety of investment. Beside this, he is at the head of an immense denomination, financially, and gave, last year, $60,000 to help the educational interests of his church out of a tight place. The different societies he represents keep him without a moment's leisure through the day, and his evenings are all consumed in business. I heard him say last week that he never slept after three o'clock in the morning. How such a man lives with such a pressure upon him is marvelous. He, of course, won't live out half his days. He's a specimen of New York business life. Our city is full of premature old men—older at thirty than their fathers are at sixty; prematurely gray, prematurely bald, limping around with canes, with their underpinning knocked out; unable to relish their food unless it is covered with the most pungent spices, or washed down with a deluge of liquor. One of the most eminent physicians said the other day: "Nine-tenths of our citizens who go to the insane asylum go there for want of sleep and want of nutritious food." Considering the style of our living and of our business, it's not at all a marvel that we have so many suicides.—N. Y. Cor. Boston Journal.

The Other Side of the "Intelligent Compositor" Question.

NEXT to the "intelligent compositor," the proofreader is the best-abused man in a newspaper establishment. Indeed, some philosophers have thought that the latter is entitled to the first rank. "We distinctly wrote," remarks the editor of the Blueville Bugle, "Brother Bolivar of Calvary Church, and only the fiendish ingenuity of the intelligent compositor could have twisted it into 'Bloody Bull-dozer of Calvary Church;' we exceedingly regret, etc., etc." "In our editorial last week on the Ann Arbor University," explains the Ingopolis True Banner, "the intention was to allude to the 'internal dissensions' and not to the 'infernal dissections,' as the proofreader imagined." "I want you to understand," writes an awfully mad correspondent of the Badgertown Argus, "that I quoted the beautiful Sanscrit line, 'Swat oggerd ei,' and not 'Root hog or die,' as your paper printed it. The Woodyard Treatment of Tramps.

The success of the authorities of Providence, in Rhode Island, in overcoming the tramp nuisance by charitable supervision has not been lost on the attention again by the annual message of Mayor Doyle of that city, who tells the story and gives the results of the establishment of the city woodyard, which has rapidly expanded to large dimensions, now giving employment in sawing wood to about eighty persons at fifty cents a day. Since last May, when the yard was first established, the city has had lodged at the station-house nearly 1,568 tramps, while during the corresponding months of 1877 it lodged 5,191. Outside of its office in this suppressing the tramp directly, the yard has given employment to many honest workers among the poor and relieved them and their families from serious fall. few sentences from the Mayor's report will show how well the scheme has been carried out.

"The imposition of labor has almost wholly kept away the thoroughly vagrant, desultory class, who used to congregate the city, begging from house to house. There is an immunity from these pests which the city has not before enjoyed for a great many years. On the opening of the yard I suggested in a notice to the public that the citizens refrain from their indiscriminate almsgiving to the vagrant class, and send them to my office with one of my cards or a note, indicating that the bearer desired a meal, when on the production of two hours of labor he should receive it. This was done, I think, quite generally, and of those who were thus put in the way of obtaining a meal not one in ten came. They preferred to go hungry rather than labor. Only fifty-seven have been furnished with meals, and most of these came in May and June. Contrast this with the fact that within three years 1,568 persons were fed, a meal to each, at the Dexter Asylum during the winter months."

The tramps who were driven away, some one will say, went to other cities or into the country and only transferred a nuisance without ornullcating it. But suppose that every man in the city and country who is confronted by a stalwart beggar could say to him, "Go to such and such a place and you will find work." how long would it be before the benefits enjoyed by Providence would be shared by almost every town and city in the land, and the tramp become a curiosity?—N. Y. Evening Post.

How the Alps Were Formed.

Prof. Judd, of the Royal School of Mines, London, gave recently an interesting explanation of the formation of the Swiss Alps. The results of geological observations he said show that four stages can be recognized in the history of those Alps. First, the existence of a line of weakness in the earth's crust nearly coincident with the line of the present mountains. This is evidenced by the fact that along this line of weakness there were volcanic outbursts, the results of which can still be traced. Secondly, there followed along this line of weakness a depression, and in this huge "trough" of miles in extent there were accumulated sands, limestones and clays by various forms of water agencies, and by animals living in the waters. Thirdly, these followed the consolidation of these soft and loose materials. There is evidence that the accumulation was of from six to seven miles in thickness, and the more weight of the superincumbent material on the lower strata would have a share in effecting consolidation. But this was not all. Under this vast covering heat had led to crystallization from fusion. There was, too, the crushing from the sides of the trough. This was illustrated by a model of the late Sir H. de la Beche, where lateral pressure was employed on layers of different colored cloth, showing how crumpling resulted, with splitting of parts of the accumulated mass. Fourthly, there followed the subsidence of all this into its present form, which was the work of rains and frosts. Some of the resulting peaks, even 15,000 feet high, were composed entirely of the disintegrated material resulting from the action of the waters either as ice in glaciers or rain and streams. The amount of material removed in this way was so stupendous it was almost staggering to try to realize the facts. The sculpturing of the contours is still going on. This fourth stage was of quite recent date, speaking geologically; but the whole history involved a lapse of time which at the beginning of this century philosophers would not have been prepared to grant, even if this since-acquired knowledge of facts had been presented them.

A New Flower.

The Italian Fanfulla records the discovery of a new gigantic flower, which is of such an amazing splendor as well as size that the Victoria Regia and the Rafflesia Arnoldi appear mere dwarfs by its side. The fortunate finder of this remarkable plant is the renowned traveler and naturalist, Odoardo Beccari, who has chiefly made his home by his exhaustive researches in the East Indian Archipelago. This hitherto unknown flower unfolded its mighty chalice bud in the forests of Sumatra. The discoverer attributes it to the family of Amorphophallus, and gives it the specific name of Titanum. The diameter of the flower, when full blown, averages thirty-three inches. A botanical curiosity has happened to the roots of the "Titan" which Signor Beccari has dispatched to Europe. Six chests of bulb root arrived at Genoa on board a French steamer, addressed to the Marquis Corsi-Salviati, of Florence, who is a famous horticulturist, and who had acquired special culture houses for the cultivation of the Victoria Regia. The customs officers of Genoa, however, out of terror of the dreaded phylloxera, have been prohibited from admitting any living plants into this port. The rule pre vails at present throughout the Italian Kingdom, and the terrible little foe of the vineyards should be housing himself in the immigrant plants, and the gathering bulbs of the "Titan" were excluded in obedience to the strict letter of the law. Notwithstanding this law, the Fanfulla declares that vineshoots from Bordeaux are being constantly landed in Genoa. The importer declares that his bundles are wanted for walking-sticks and umbrella-handles, and under this alibi they escape the scrutiny of the customs officers, who never think that the "vine-louse" may be secreting himself in the innocent-looking bundles. What has become of Signor Beccari's important cargo the Italian journal does not yet know.—London Globe.

—Fattening beef animals pays; but trying to fatten inferior animals is a waste of energy, time and labor. The animals should be selected with special reference to the quickness with which they will fatten; to the quality of the beef, fineness of bone, compactness of body, and small amount of offal which the carcass will yield.—American Agriculturist.

—Don't buy any patent "drinking fountains" for your fowls. I bought two and invented one, and I would sell the whole lot for one good three-cent postage stamp. Common wooden buckets are the best things for fowls to drink from that I can find; they are high enough to keep the hens from scratching into the drinking dish, and not too high for the fowl's convenience, and, beside, they are easily kept clean; an old broom and some hot water will make them as "clean as a whistle" in a few minutes.—Cor. Prairie Farmer.

—A contemporary says: "There is no reason why farming toast can not be made to pay much oftener than it does. Very few have learned to regard it as a business. It is a sort of chance work all round. Most men look upon it as a sort of real estate transaction. They hope one day to sell out at a big figure, hence are afraid to improve their farms with a view to agricultural operations, for fear that whoever buys the land will not care for these little things. We have often heard some improving farmer ridiculed for his expenditures by some knowing one, who were very sure would-be wealthy men put no more fertilizers in the earth's crust nearly coincident with the line of the present mountains. This is evidenced by the fact that along this line of weakness there were volcanic outbursts, the results of which can still be traced. Secondly, there followed along this line of weakness a depression, and in this huge "trough" of miles in extent there were accumulated sands, limestones and clays by various forms of water agencies, and by animals living in the waters. Thirdly, these followed the consolidation of these soft and loose materials. There is evidence that the accumulation was of from six to seven miles in thickness, and the more weight of the superincumbent material on the lower strata would have a share in effecting consolidation. But this was not all. Under this vast covering heat had led to crystallization from fusion. There was, too, the crushing from the sides of the trough. This was illustrated by a model of the late Sir H. de la Beche, where lateral pressure was employed on layers of different colored cloth, showing how crumpling resulted, with splitting of parts of the accumulated mass. Fourthly, there followed the subsidence of all this into its present form, which was the work of rains and frosts. Some of the resulting peaks, even 15,000 feet high, were composed entirely of the disintegrated material resulting from the action of the water, either as ice in glaciers or rain and streams. The amount of material removed in this way was so stupendous it was almost staggering to try to realize the facts. The sculpturing of the contours is still going on. This fourth stage was of quite recent date, speaking geologically; but the whole history involved a lapse of time which at the beginning of this century philosophers would not have been prepared to grant, even if this since-acquired knowledge of facts had been presented them.

Winter Butter.

The most serious difficulties of the dairy begin with the cold weather. In the winter season cows have usually passed their period of freshness any several months, the food is dry, and the temperature is very low; all these circumstances tend to change the condition of the milk and cream, and affect the character of the butter, so that with the advent of winter the complaints of trouble with the churning become constant, and the dairy people become disgusted and despairing. The butter refuses to come in many instances, and after many hours of patient churning there is a foamy mass of sour cream without any sign of butter in it. Or the butter, after hours of churning, comes in shape like grains of sand, without any coherence, and white, and of disagreeable appearance. The least disagreeable result is the appearance of white curdy specks, which disfigure the butter and render it unsatisfactory alike to the exacting customer and the ambitious producer.

The happy dairyman is he who has all his plans laid for winter business. His cows are fresh; he has a stock of beets, mangels or carrots on hand; his hay is green and odorous, having been cut in June, and cured while it was yet young, with all its juices sweet and abundant; his barn is warm; his yards are well sheltered; his dairy is warmed to a summer temperature, and his product is of even quality, and comes from the churn without trouble or disappointment. He enjoys the knowledge that his butter is selling at double the rates of the summer markets, and he is never disturbed by the souring of his milk or the softness or early spoiling of his product. It is not the winter dairyman who complains of the difficulties which have been referred to, because by his method of business they cannot possibly occur. But for many of those who are not so fortunate, and who are compelled by circumstances to make butter in the winter season, there is hope and comfort in the knowledge that by good management their troubles may be either prevented or greatly eased. In some cases it will be impossible to remove or prevent the difficulties not with, as, for instance, when there is one cow only, and she is either constitutionally a poor butter cow, or is in such a condition that good butter cannot be expected from her.

The most frequent difficulty experienced at this season is the impossibility of procuring butter after long-continued churning. This may be caused by the condition of the cow, constitutionally or otherwise. When it is constitutional there is no remedy, obviously; otherwise, the cow may have been milking for a long-continued period, and the quality of the milk may have become changed. In all cases it will be found that the mixture of the milk of a fresh cow with the other milk will remove the difficulty; so that where several cows are kept, it should be so arranged that some of the cows should come in early in the winter. This trouble may also be caused by keeping the milk too long before churning, or by churning the cream at too low a temperature. In the former case, the milk may have undergone the first process of decomposition, which is the production of alcohol from the fermentation of the milk sugar, and this forms an emulsion with the fat-globules, which forms in the churn, and from which butter never can be made. In the latter case the fat-globules are too solid and hard to adhere together, and they either fail to gather into butter or they form a loose sand or gravel-like mass, which is difficult to work together. Most persons are careful in confectionery or to use the yelks of eggs of other coloring matter in cooking. The eye may justly be pleased as well as the palate, and if the coloring is innocent, as is annatto, it is unobjectionable.—N. Y. Times.

THE Republique Francoise summarizes as follows the military establishment of France, as fixed by the budget of war: The total credits amount to about 562,936,000 francs. They provide for the maintenance of an effective force of 496,442 men and 124,279 horses. But, from those figures must be deducted 27,132 of the former and 13,480 of the latter, belonging to the gendarmerie, so that the remainder will only be 469,310 men and 110,799 horses for the troops properly so-called. Of those last numbers, 416,886 and 95,043 are in France, and 52,424 and 15,756 in Algeria.

THE death of Princess Alice of Hesse conveys a warning which should not be forgotten. The physicians who have investigated the cause of the peculiar virulence of the diphtheria which attacked her family with such fatal results have agreed that the rapid spread of the infection was entirely due to imprudent kissing. A child with a sore throat ought not to be permitted to kiss any of its companions.—N. Y. Evening Post.

How to Cure Frozen Feet.

To the Editor of the Indianapolis Journal:

About twenty years ago, when Browning & Sloan kept drug-store on the north side of West Washington street, I happened in as Dr. Newcomer was ordering a fly-blister for the foot of a female patient which had been badly frozen. Some unmasked the philosophy of the prescription, to which he replied that the cause of the itching and other disagreeable pains of frozen feet was the dead cuticle, which obstructed healthy action of the pores. The blister removed that, and the new cuticle would allow proper perspiration, and itching would cease. The philosophy struck me as sound, but the fly-blister was objectionable, both as a matter of convenience and expense. Having two feet that had been itching of winters for twenty years, I resolved to try the experiment of removing the cuticle by a cheaper and more convenient method. I got some lumps of fresh lime and placed them in a bowl of strong white-wash mixture, as warm as I could comfortably bear my feet in. At night, just as they began their nocturnal fleshing, I seated them in the bowl for my whitewash. The relief was instantaneous. It felt really comfortable. At the end of thirty minutes I took them out, all shriveled up, but free from pain. Then began a brisk rubbing, and there came off great rolls of dead cuticle; then I greased my feet with a little mutton-tallow, put on some cotton socks to preserve the lard from the bed-clothes, and went to bed. I repeated the application two or three times, and have never suffered from frozen feet since longer than it would take to get the whitewash ready on each recurrence of frost-bite. As I took out no patent, Dr. Newcomer and all other doctors are at liberty to use the prescription. It is cheaper than Spanish flies and a great deal better.

A Sad Case.

The following heartrending tale was brought under my notice, the other day: A strong man, in the prime of life, with a young wife and two merry, bright-eyed children, a boy and girl, had a responsible position in a large office in Glasgow. The honest earnings, his all, had disappeared, with the exception of his salary, which was barely sufficient to meet the wants of himself and family. It preys upon his mind; he is becoming gloomy; his wife strives to cheer him; she places their boy upon his knee; he presses him to his heart with the bitter cry, "Will they take you away, too?" On Sabbath day comes round—his wife thinks the rest of the Holy Sabbath will do him good—she watches him closely and anxiously. His eye rests upon his boy. He lifts him tenderly and lovingly in his arms. Large tears roll down his cheeks, as he strains him to his bosom. He looks at his wife and says, "Don't let them take the boy—here, take care of him while I go and pay my accounts." "Oh, not to-day!" exclaims his wife; "not today, my husband—this is the Sabbath day." She flings her arms about his neck, her very heart bursting with grief as the dreadful truth flashes across her mind. She looks into those eyes that were wont to beam upon her with the most loving intelligence—now they are dull, vacant, expressionless—a wreck of humanity—and she—she—the mind behind them was deranged. The poor wife alone, worse than alone, stands before him tranquil with horror and grief intolerable. What a change! A few days ago, and that family were joyous, happy and contented. Now, worse than death has overtaken them. He who was their light, the joy of their hearts, their stay, remains in sad confinement—walking about and incessantly muttering, and looking as if searching for some one, and saying, "They have taken all—all, and here have they taken him to? I want my boy—my God, where is my boy?" etc. But thereafter there are no words for a picture of a maniac.—Letter from Scotland.

A Lady's Wish.

"Oh, how I do wish my skin was as clear and soft as yours," said a lady to her friend. "You can easily make it so," answered the friend. "How?" inquired the first lady. "By using Hop Bitters, that gives pure, rich blood and blooming health. It done it for me, as you observe."

B. BROWNE, of Monroe City, Ind., writes under date of Dec. 31, 1877, that his wife used Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription with wonderful results. It effected her entire cure, after several physicians had failed. The same similar letters positively admitting that the Favorite Prescription had cured the diseases and weaknesses peculiar to women, induced Dr. Pierce to sell it under a guarantee. Ladies need no longer submit to useless and painful local treatment, as the Favorite Prescription is a safe, sure, and speedy cure. Illustrated books who had been bedridden for years have been restored to perfect health by its use.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Jan. 17, 1879

EDITOR SENTINEL.

Whenever there is a commotion in the city, at which a riot is imminent, the United States authorities feel the utmost anxiety concerning the immense amount of valuables stored in the vaults of the Sub-Treasury in this city, the largest exchequer of public money in the country. During the late bitter riots the employes of the Government in that institution were fully armed and equipped to resist any insurrection s mob might make on the Government deposits, but happily their preparations were not put to a test. In order to guard against contingencies of a similar nature, especially since the monster vaults for the reception of bullion was erected a year or two ago, the Secretary of the Treasury has had the building inspected, and a report made as to the best method of strengthening as well as properly defending it in case of an attack. In the course of time he made his report, which was adopted. Within a few days past a contract was signed by the Treasury Department for steel grating, bars, and shutters to be attached to the building. Besides this three steel turrets are to be erected on the roof, pierced for musketry, so as to guard against and repel an attack from the tops of adjoining houses. The center turret is to be of octagonal shape. At the same time the Assay Office, adjoining the Sub-Treasury, on Wall Street, will be protected. Mr. Jackson, Superintendent of Repairs and Government Buildings in this city, made the plans for this work and will superintend the construction. The alterations will be commenced in a very few days, and pushed to completion in the shortest possible period. When this is done, we will have at least one citadel in our midst which will defy all communistic efforts.

Broadway, despite its publicity, its wealth, and the care with which it is watched, is about the worst street for large fires in all New York. On last Tuesday night came another of these heavy visitations, at the corner of Broadway and Grand Street, where, early in the evening, the fire broke out in a masonry sort of way, and despite the efforts of the whole fire department was up properly to the value of nearly two millions of dollars. The evening was mild and quiet. Had there been a high wind we might of had another Chicago experience. Several large firms were burned out, all carrying immense stocks of goods, most of which were covered by insurance. It took nearly two days to fully extinguish the flames in the burning debris, during which time Broadway was almost impassable at that point, and the tide of its travel checked the adjacent streets.

Mr. Wm. H. Vanderbilt would doubtless endorse, if requested, the old saying, to the effect that it never rains but it pours. No sooner do the snow-drifts bury the New York Central Railroad out of sight, and bring upon it a loss of something like a million—most of which, of course, comes out of his pocket—than that will contest breaks out fresh in more threatening shape than ever, and then, when the unhappy multimaire seeks to forget his woes by taking the road with his spanking chestnuts, after the manner of his illustrious parent, those spirited animals run away with him and into a slough of people, scattering them like a whirlwind, and bringing upon him executions galore and a large bill for damages.

Poor William feel inclined to succumb under this complication of misfortunes, were it not that their depressing influence is partially counterbalanced by the success of his latest transportation scheme, which is the establishment of a new steamship freight line to Europe, to run under his control in connection with the new York Central Road. The announcement of this new line is received here with great satisfaction, as tending to decrease the talk about the declining commercial supremacy of New York.

Speaking of the oft-repeated statement about the coming census of New York as the metropolis, I happened across some figures the other day which have been compiled by the Building Department, showing the material increase of this city for ten years past. During this period nearly 20,000 new buildings have been erected in New York at a cost of about $200,000,000. The best year for this business was 1871, when $42,000,000 were expended on 2,800 structures. Last year the number was about 1,700 at a cost of $15,000,000. I have no general figures of the doings in this line of other cities which claim the dignity of rivalship with New York but learn that in 1878 the cost of new buildings erected in Boston was less than $3,500,000. This may be taken, I suppose, as some indication of the comparative growth of New York and other cities. I trust the figures furnish satisfactory encouragement to each of the provincial cities on years to wrest the crown of supremacy from Manhattan Island.

The Brooklyn Bridge Company have won the old trick in the legal game which has been playing for months between them and Comptroller Kelly, of this city. The latter, as is well known, brought proceedings to a standstill awile ago by refusing to issue bonds to provide for meeting New York's share of the further cost of the structure, on the ground that the limitation on the total cost of the bridge fixed by law had been already overpassed, and that this city had the right to refuse to bleed further for what he intimated is nothing more than a corrupt job. In the lower Court Mr. Kelly's position was sustained, but the Bridge Company went to the Supreme Court, and have this week obtained a reversal of the previous decision and a mandamus ordering the Comptroller to issue $1,000,000 worth of bonds, and pay over their proceeds to the Bridge Trustees without delay. Secretary of State Evarts argued the case for the latter.

Madame Anderson, the plucky little English pedestrienne, finished her long tramp in Brooklyn, this week, with great eclat, after 2,700 consecutive quarter hours of work. The scene at the close of this task is described as being one of the wildest enthusiasm. The building became so packed with people that the police had to shut the sale of tickets, and as the fair walkist made her closing turn of the circle, wrapped in the Stars and Stripes, the popular excitement found vent in frantic cheers $32,000 gate money was taken during the four weeks, and the muscular lady has since been given a banquet and a silver service worth $600.

I am now seriously considering the plan of quitting the newspaper business and hanging out my shingle as a "walkist."

RADIX.

Don't Like Grant.

From the Okolona (Miss.) Southern States.

Yankeedom is beginning to make stand that our people are still in favor of State's rights and the rule of white men.

That is why she threatens to fall back on Grant, and give him a third term of power.

Well? we have this to say: If Grant is elected and attempts to reinaugurate the reign of damnation and devility that characterized his previous administrations he will find himself checkmated after the first move.

The South has recovered the right of home-rule, and she proposes to keep it henceforth and forever—Grant or no Grant—and the sooner the hell beasts of Puritania learn this little lesson by heart the better it will be for their temporal welfare.

The South was helpless and hopeless at the close of our magnificent struggle for liberty, and the Heaven ordained system of human labor; but the hour of our prostration is past, we have the upper hand again, thank God! and Grant, with all his sandbill minions, has no terrors for us.

Let him try his old role of dictator again, and see how it will work.

He will find his mandates as powerless as those of King Canute, who tried to command the motions of the multitudinous waves.

Let Yankeedom elect Grant if she wants to; let her proclaim him emperor if she wants to. He and she will find that his power ends where that of our old common-wealths begins.

The South defies Grant: she defies the vicious vulgarians who prop him up; she defies all potentates and powers outside of the original Constitution of the Union.

A Hillside Supervisor is the author of an ingenious plan to increase the crime of perjury in the State by compelling every Supervisor in this State to commit flat perjury. This he proposes to accomplish by having the legislature pass a law, which he has petitioned for, to require every Supervisor to swear to the correctness of assessments made by him. The passage of such a law would prevent any man from accepting the office of Supervisor unless he was willing to commit perjury, and intended to do so. This, it will be seen upon a moment's reflection, is a nefarious plot to declare by law that none but Democrats shall be eligible to the office of Supervisor. It is well known to be the universal belief that any Supervisor, especially in the rural district, who should dare make a "really and truly honest to John hop-my-thumb" assessment roll would be unceremoniously torn in pieces by the indignant populace. The most that is expected of a Supervisor is that he shall make an assessment roll that isn't any worse than the assessment rolls of the other Supervisors. If it is the least trifle more honestly impartial than the average he is worthy to be crowned with barrels—say a good sized barrel alohol for his superior virtue. And now we have this extraordinary petition to compel Supervisors, by law, to take oath to the correctness of their assessments!

Although it is not the precise language of the decalogue, nevertheless its spirit is that thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor, any more than against thy neighbor, but the Supervisor who should make oath that his assessment were correct would, it is the common opinion, bear false witness against both himself and his neighbors. He would accuse himself of the offense of not having fulfilled honorably the expectations which induced some of his constituents to vote for him, and put on airs as being more honest than the taxpayers who elected him; and he would accuse his neighbors of being really as poor as they pretended to be about assessment time. If he could forgive himself, his neighbors could never forgive a Supervisor who should do this. Many a worthy citizen is worth only a certain small amount for the purposes of taxation, but in any such should publicly accuse him, at any other time of the year, of being really the poverty stricken, there would be an immediate violent disturbance of the peace and dignity of the people of the State of Michigan in that vicinity. Moreover, this new device is utterly useless. The efficacy of oaths in this matter—that is, their perfect inefficacy—is fully tested by the official oath of each Supervisor to support the constitution, which especially requires "actual cash value" assessments, and is systematically disobeyed.—Detroit Post and Tribune.

General News Summary.

FORTY-FIFTH CONGRESS—SECOND SESSION.

IN the Senate, on the 14th, a resolution was agreed to, directing the Secretary of the Interior to inquire and report what railroad company, individual or individuals are building a railroad across the public domain in Arizona, and by what authority the road is being constructed. The bill to amend the Patent laws was taken up, and a substitute was agreed to. In the House, in Committee of the Whole, the bill for the payment of pensions to the survivors of the Mexican and other wars, was considered and amended. The Speaker announced appointments to fill vacancies in committees, as follows: Judiciary, Forney (Ala.); District of Columbia, Townshend (Ill.); Foreign Affairs, Arnkin (Ga.); Rollins, Young (Ga.).

A RESOLUTION was agreed to in the Senate, on the 15th, instructing the Committee on Indian Affairs to inquire into the circumstances which led to the recent massacre of Cheyenne Indians from Fort Robinson, and their slaughter by United States forces. The Conference report on the Military Appropriation bill was agreed to. A communication was received in the House from the Secretary of the Treasury, showing that the aggregate amount of balances on hand to the credit of the Government, in the National Bank depositaries, on the 1st of January, was $18,300,865. After a lengthy debate, a tariff bill was passed—117 to 72—authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to issue, in exchange for fractional money, United States certificates of deposit of denominations of no dollars, bearing interest at the rate of 2 per cent., and redeemable at any time, with accrued interest, on five days' notice, authorized to be issued and directing that the moneys so received be applied only to the payment of 5-20 bonds. A bill was also passed—194 to 49—making United States bonds receivable for duties on imports. A bill was reported to facilitate the refunding of the National debt.

IN the Senate, on the 16th, Mr. Windom introduced a resolution that, with a view to a peaceful adjustment of all questions relating to suffrage, etc., a committee of seven Senators be appointed, to inquire into the practicability of encouraging and promoting, by all just and proper methods, a partial migration of colored persons from these States and Congress, to such Territories as they are not allowed to freely and peacefully enjoy and exercise their Constitutional rights as American citizens. Under which States as may desire to receive and will protect them in the enjoyment of such rights, or to such Territory or Territories of the United States as may be provided for their reception and settlement, and that the plan be reported to the Senate at the present session. The House bill providing for the payment of arrears of pensions to disabled soldiers, etc., was passed. In the House a bill was passed to facilitate the refunding of the National debt. The bill organizing the Mississippi River Improvement Commission, and providing for the improvement of that river and the protection of its alluvial lands, was considered and the report of the Whole. A bill was passed to authorize local taxation of legal-tender notes. In the evening, numerous services were held in honor of the late Prof. Joseph Henry, in the presence of a vast audience. The President and his Cabinet, Justices of the Supreme Court, members of the Senate and members of various societies with which Prof. Henry had been associated, occupied seats on the floor.

THE credentials of Senator Honston, of Alabama, were presented in the Senate, on the 17th. The bill to amend the Patent laws was further considered and amended. At the request of Mr. Windom, he and Senator Bayard were excused from further service on the Teller Special Committee to investigate the recent elections, and the Vice-President appointed Messrs. McDonald and Saulsbury to fill the vacancies. Adjourned to the 20th. In the House, the Senate bill defining the manner in which certain land scrip may be assigned and located by actual settlers, was passed. In Committee of the Whole, the bill for the payment of $240,000 to the Trustees of Bull Poland Baptist Seminary and High School in Virginia, for rent of buildings during the war, was debated at length, its opponents asserting it to be a war claim, and its friends claiming it to be a just bill for rent of property.

THE Senate was not in session on the 18th. The Geneva Award bill was taken up in the House, and a substitute was adopted as an amendment, carrying and continuing the Court of Commissioners of Alabama Claims during the number of judges at three; requiring the Court to convene and organize as soon as practicable, in Washington, and limiting its existence to eighteen months; the claims now filed only to three grades; the bill, as amended, was passed—116 to 45. The Senate amendments to the Pension Appropriation bill were concurred in.

IN the Senate, on the 20th, a bill was introduced to provide a uniform National currency; to retire the notes of National Banks, and prohibit their incorporation and their issue of notes, to utilize silver and silver coin, etc. Mr. Morgan submitted a substitute, agreed upon by the Democratic caucus, for Mr. Edmunds' resolutions concerning suffrage and the later Constitutional amendments, the resolutions and the substitute declare the late amendments to the Constitution to be as valid and binding as any other part of the Constitution, and that it is the right and duty of the United States, so far as the power has been delegated to them, to enforce said amendments, and to prohibit any discrimination in the exercise of all rights there secured; that the Government of the United States and that of the several States are each within the limits of their respective jurisdiction, and whose rights within its jurisdiction it will protect; that the Government of the United States is not one of delegated powers alone, but that the United States have also the right and power of creation in the States, but the Fifteenth Amendment has invested citizens of the United States with a new Constitutional right, and under the amendment Congress may, by appropriate legislation, prevent the denial or abridgment of such right by any citizen of the United States on account of race, color or previous condition of servitude; that when such right to vote is denied or abridged by the conduct of a person who is not so acting by authority and obedience to the laws of a State, the penalty upon such person for such conduct is in the State Government and not in the Government of the United States. The bill to amend the Patent laws was further considered, and several amendments were disposed of, and a communication was received from the Attorney-General, in which he suggests the appointment of a commission to examine into and ascertain and report whether the canal connecting the navigation of the Wabash and Miami Rivers and Lake Erie, in Indiana, has been abandoned, and if the public lands through which the canal was granted to the State by the General Government, have been forfeited to the United States, and what action is necessary to enable the Government to obtain possession thereof. Bills were introduced in the House to prevent the adulteration of articles of food and drink; to regulate the charges on Pullman palace and other sleeping cars; making trade-dollars legal tenders to pay debts; to establish a uniform measure of time; to reduce the price of public lands within railroad limits; to secure to the people of every State equal and just representation. Mr. Potter asked leave to offer a resolution authorizing an investigation of the cipher dispatches, and to have it adopted under a suspension of the rules, but it was objected to by Mr. Clark, Speaker refused to entertain the resolution, and it was agreed that Mr. Potter should report it on the 21st.

CHARLES SHAHER and James McDonnell, "Mollie Maguires," convicted of the murder of George K. Smith, at Auttendried, Nov. 5, 1875, were hanged at Mauch Chunk, Pa., on the 14th. A few seconds after the Sheriff pulled the rope, and while the men were struggling in their death agonies, the Prison bell was violently rung. On sending to investigate the cause of the disturbance, the door was opened, and in rushed Shaffer's and McDonnell's brothers. Both of them hastened forward to the scaffold, when the brother of McDonnell, a middle-haired old man, screamed at the top of his voice: "Oh, you murderers! You have murdered my brother! They bore a reprieve from the Governor, but it reached the Prison a few seconds too late to be of any avail.

WASHINGTON (D. C.) dispatches of the 17th say the yellow-fever experts were in session in that city preparing their report. It was respected that the medical members of the commission were unanimous in the opinion that the fever was imported into New Orleans from Cuba, through the very lax quarantine of that city, and the members emphatically favor a National Quarantine act. At the present time, they say, notwithstanding the unprecedented severity of the season, there was a very severe case of yellow fever at New Orleans which directly controverted the accepted theory that the germs were destroyed by a temperature of 32 deg. Fah.

The introduction of a bill in the Legislature to prevent the netting of pigeons has created quite a furore among pigeon catchers

The Graeco-Roman wrestling match between Major J. H. McLaughlin, of Detroit, and Andre Crystal, a French athlete from San Francisco, which took place in Detroit on Saturday the 18th, resulted in a victory for the former in one bout, which lasted only three minutes. McLaughlin not only threw the Frenchman, but threw him so hard that the right collar bone of the latter was broken, disabling him so that he could not respond when "time" was called for the second bout.

The Legislature of Wisconsin on Wednesday, elected Matt H. Carpenter once more to the United States Senate, the Republican caucus having ended its long struggle by nominating him by acclamation. By this election Wisconsin will again take a front rank in the Senate, and be represented by a man of commanding ability and brilliant eloquence. If the choice of Senator had been left to a direct vote of the people it would be the same, as Mr. Carpenter is a popular favorite all over Wisconsin.

Major General John A. Logan was elected United States Senator by the Illinois Legislature last Tuesday for the full term, commencing with the 5th of March next. He received the vote of every Republican member in both Houses. He was defeated two years ago by precisely the same tactics that beat Zach. Chandler in this State four years ago, and his election at this time is peculiarly gratifying to all stalwart Republicans, not only in Illinois, but all over the Great Northwest. What the North wants in the Senate is more Chandlers and Logans, and fewer "all and all" ciphers. The South sends such men as Hill, Gordon, Lamar, and others of that radical stamp, and to checkmate them, the North should send such stalwarts as Ferry, Chandler, Logan Conkling and Blaine.

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to-day dying from the effects of dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of loaded stomach upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence, as it ought and might and should be, as nought to be. There is no good reason for this. If you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Crouter, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

CHARLEVOIX is fast becoming known as the most desirable summer resort of the North. Its cool breezes, facilities for healthful recreation, good society, and beautiful scenery, justly entitle it to its renown. Why should it not be entitled to just as great renown as a winter resort, where the mercury does not reach a point below nine degrees above zero. They should come here from Southern Kansas, where the thermometer has marked fifteen degrees below zero the present winter.

INCORPORATION.

Shall Charlevoix Advance a Step and Incorporate?

Contemplating occasions which follow in the track of growth and accumulation of wealth and population, our law makers have framed acts which are calculated to meet these necessities.

Laws are given which are calculated to equilize benefits, by equalizing the expense of obtaining them and which regulate evils which are inevitable to all towns of any size.

The law authorizing the incorporation of villages and cities was made with these objects in view, and inasmuch as are without number where it has been tried and proven lucrative and profitable.

It is generally conceded that Charlevoix has reached a size and importance when incorporation is called for. We have a town renowned for its beauty and of prospects most flattering. Our leading tax citizens, with few exceptions, can see that the time has arrived for the town to take this step. The benefits to be derived are many and obvious.

At present, many of our most central and desirable village lots are owned by non residents, who, foreseeing the future importance of the town, hold their property with a tenacity which, under other circumstances would be admirable. They refuse to provide walks along their fronts, and the result is, residents consider a short patch of side walk on their front of little benefit, while those and both remain for them to walk through. Incorporation will give us a net work of side walks, which, while of general benefit, will enchance the value of every man's property at least equal to the expense incurred. This will not, as has been stated by some, compel the building of side walks to remote and comparatively unsettled points, any more than it will compel the paving of streets. We must bear in mind that the people are the regulators in an incorporated village, as much as they are in a township, and more, for their representation is greater.

Another benefit is this: While we have been remarkably free from fires let us not overlook the fact that our village is steadily becoming more compact, and consequently more liable to conflagrations. Incorporation will place us in a position to more effectually guard against carelessness in the instruction of buildings, chimneys, etc.

Incorporation will provide that Jew peddlers and trailing vessels hailing from other ports shall pay license for infringing upon a trade which should belong to our merchants.

Experience has taught us also, that the shipping business of our harbor should have the oversight of some person empowered by law to prevent vessels from coming in the channel, and regulating other evils which are connected with any harbor of the importance of ours.

The "bugaboo" of "expense" and "taxation" is a mistaken idea, and is born of a prejudice which is naturally caused by the burdens imposed by the extravagance of incorporated cities. In a town of this size the matter of expense is in the hands of the people. The officers consist of a President and six trustees, who shall draw no compensation; a Marshal, whose fees come from violators of the law; a Clerk and Assessor, whose duties constitute a portion of what the corresponding officers of the Township now have to do. Substantially, it amounts to a division of the labors and emoluments of the Township Clerk and Treasurer with the Clerk and Assessor of the Incorporated village. We see no excessive burden in this, and we are sure there is none when compared with the benefits derived.

The representation on the County Board remains the same as now,—the Township Supervisor representing the village in that body.

To discuss the question, a public meeting is called to meet at the school house on Saturday evening next. Let every resident of the village attend.

BESIEGED BY A RHINOCEROS.

"Baas, baas! spoor groot one-horn skellum!"

Such was the, to me, rather unintelligible announcement with which my friend M——'s bush-boy came rushing in just about sunrise one morning, as we were sitting over our breakfast at the door of the house—out of those regular old Dutch-built farm-houses, that one hardly ever sees nowadays, except in South Africa. But he meant by it was, "Baas, scent the trail of a big rhinoceros rascal!"

"Where?" cried M——, jumping up; for he was a keen sportsman, and never lost an opportunity of "potting" something.

"Jut by Hollow Spring, baas—spoor good!"

"There's a chance for you, my boy," said M—— turning to me. "Now you'll be able to see how these clephantguns of mine do their work; I think you'll find them the right sort."

"Let me try the jolo by myself," cried I, eagerly; for, like all "greenhorns," I was frantic to do some wheard-of feat, and win my laurels at once. "I've never shot a rhinoceros yet, you know."

"Can't, really, my dear boy," said M——, in the most exasperatingly indulgent tone: "when you're a little better used to the African bush, you can do what you like; but I swore to let you go alone now, the least I could expect would be a life-long remorse for having contrived at a suicide. No, we'll make a party of three to visit our friend, and he'll hardly give the slip to us all, I fancy."

Accordingly, we started out that very night, Swart, the bush-boy, making the third of our party, but I suppose the rhinoceros was too modest to face so many visitors at once, for, although we kept watch till sunrise, there was no sign of him. The next night it was just the same; and at last I got mad at the idea of losing my chance—the first I had ever had with the big game—that, in spite of what M—— had said, I made up my mind to try my luck single-handed.

I should have told you that the Hollow Spring frequented by my four-footed friend lay about eight miles from the house, in a deep gully, one side of which went up into a long log-backed ridge, topped by a big knuckle of rock that overlooked the spring at a range of fifty yards—as pretty a "stand" as any sportsman could wish. So, when night came, I stole out of the house with one of M——'s vaunted "elephant-guns,"—a piece carrying a five-ounce "explosive ball," steel-tipped, and holding enough fulminating powder to blow off the spine of a megatherium. To guard against the recoil of such a charge, the stock was fitted with a thick pad; so, with gun and ammunition together, I had quite enough to carry for an eight-mile tramp through the bush.

I dare say there are ugly thickets in South America and Central Asia; but Africa beats them both. Imagine a forest of fish-hooks, relieved by a occasional patch of pen-knives, and you have it exactly. There's one horrid spike thing, called by the Dutch "Wache-een-betje," which the English have corrupted into "wait-a-bit," and it does make you wait a bit if once it gets hold of you. I've known a fellow to be laid up for a fortnight with a scratch from one. So you may think that with masses of this incarnate devil round me, I had to pick my way gingerly enough.

When I got to the place, lo! and behold, the pad of my gun had fallen off! To go back and look for it would have been like hunting for a needle in a hay-stack. So I filled my handkerchief with wild grass, and tucked it in under the shoulder of my jacket as a substitute, and then I took my post behind the rock and waited.

The full moon was just rising over the trees (a glorious sight, I can tell you), when I heard a distant tramping, like the tread of an elephant, only quicker; for a full-grown rhinoceros, bulkuary as he looks, can be active enough at times, as you'd soon find it you stood a charge from him when his temper's up. So I had not long to wait before there came a thick snort, and the great brown barrel of a body loomed out in the streak of moonlight, just over the spring. The brute stopped to take aim, before I pulled trigger.

The next few seconds were a blank; and then I awoke to the consciousness that my shoulder was aching as if it were broken, and that something was grunting savagely a few yards off; and then I saw the huge snout and great white tusks coming right at me! I don't think any acrobat could have been quicker than I was in clutching a passjecting bough, and swinging up into the tree overhead; and I'd hardly got there when the brute came to a stand at the trunk almost shaking me off again. For a minute or two, my heart was in my mouth; for he thumped against the tree till I really thought he would have it down; and when he found he couldn't, he stamped the earth in a fury, and tore it up with his horn in a horribly suggestive way that made my flesh creep.

Here I was, then, in the crisis of a regular "adventure," such as I had always longed for; but somehow, now that I was in it, it didn't seem so very delightful. It's one thing to read of adventures in an easy-chair after dinner, and another to act them for yourself all night on a hard bough, with thousands of mosquitoes pitching into you, and a mad rhinoceros galloping about underneath.

The likeness between my situation and some of those recorded by Capt. Mayne Reid set me overhauling my recollections of that voracious author, in the hope of an idea; but the more I thought, the more the Captain failed me. Basil, when followed up a tree by a bear, got his brothers to throw him up a rope, and slid down; but I had no brothers, and no rope. Ben Brace, when "treed" by the lion, lassoed his dropped musket, and blew the king of beasts therewith: but I had no lasso, and couldn't have used it, if I had. Somebody else, blockaded by a "grizzly," waited till Brain fell asleep, and then slipped away; but my rhinoceros seemed distressingly wide-awake, and even if he had dozed, the experiment would not have commended itself to my fancy. In short, the most masterly stratagem I could devise, was to stay where I was, and I did so.

That night was the longest I ever spent, and no mistake. Toward morning, Master Rhino frequently took a brief leave of absence into the bush, as if to tempt me down; but I heard him trampling in the distance, and wasn't to be caught. Day was just dawning, and I was beginning to wonder how much longer I could stand the thirst that was parching me up, when suddenly I heard a shot among the bushes, so close that it made me start. Then the boughs parted, and I saw M——'s jolly face looking up at me, with a grin from ear to ear.

"Fairly treed, eh, my boy? Well, I've raised the siege for you, and yonder lies the enemy. Your bullet's run down his side, under the skin, without exploding, so I suppose you must have hit him slantwise. Better luck next time. Anyhow, I'm glad to find you alive; but I fancy you won't go out alone again in a hurry!"

And, to tell the truth, I didn't for a pretty long while after that day.—Buried Ker, in St. Nicholas for February.

How Burdette "Stuffed" the Inquisitive Man.

Do you remember, some weeks since, I was greatly annoyed by an inquisitive man down in Maine, and abruptly closed my letter for the purpose of stuffing the aforesaid man.

Well, I stuffed him.

"Much of a place, your town?" he asked.

"Oh, yes," I said, with the matter-of-course carelessness of a citizen of the great western metropolis, "about forty-five thousand, I guess."

The man eyed me with keen, awakening interest. "So big as that?" he said.

I nodded, and he presently said, "Well, I had no idea there was such a large city in Iowa. State must be pretty well settled up, I reckon?"

I said, "Yes, it was. Some portions of it pretty wild, though."

"Any large game in the State?"

"Herds of it," I said. "I killed dear last winter not two miles from the Burlington Court-House."

I pacified my conscience for this lie by explaining to that rebellious and vociferous monitor that there was no Burlington Court-House, that it was burned down seven years ago, and the county was waiting until it could buy a second-hand Court-House for $1.75, before replacing it. Therefore, I could truthfully say that I killed all the deer that came within two miles of our Court-House.

"I want to know!" the native exclaimed.

"Do you, though?" thought I, "then I'll tell you." And so I went on. "Why, the wolves only two years ago, made a raid right into Burlington and killed all the chickens on South Hill."

Conscience raised a terrible protest at this, but I hushed it up too quick, by stating the well-known case of Meigs Schenck's wolf that got loose and in one single summer night ate up everything on South Hill that wore feathers. The native looked astonished and doubly interested.

"Any Indians?" he said.

"Loads," I said, "I told him, yawning wearily, as one who talks of old, stale things. "Sitting Bull was educated at the Baptist collegiate institute, in Burlington, and was expelled for trying to scalp Prof. Wortman with a horse shoe magnet."

"You don't tell me!" exclaimed the native in wild amazement. By this time I was perfectly reckless, and told the consternated native to keep its mouth shut and give me a chance.

"Oh yes," I said, "Yellow Wolf sold medicine logs is still standing right out on West Hill. The Indians came into the city very frequently, tearing through the streets on their wiry little ponies."

"Ever have my trouble with them?" the man asked.

"Oh, no," I said carelessly, "the citizens seldom do. The Cow Boys, who come up from Texas with cattle, hate them terribly, and occasionally drop one of them in "to stay" sets just for revolver practice. But nobody else interferes in their fights."

"I suppose," the man said, "you all carry revolvers strapped around you, out there?"

"Oh, yes." I replied, "of course. We have to; a man never knows when he is going to have trouble with somebody, and in case of any little misunderstanding, it wouldn't do for a fellow not to be heeled."

I think the man shuddered a little. Then, fearing he might ask to look at my revolver, I casually remarked that I never carried my barkers when I came east.

He said, no, he supposed not. Then he looked out of the window a long time and said nothing. Finally I asked him in what part of Maine he made his home. He looked up at me in surprise.

"Me?" he said. "Bless you, I don't live in this rock patch. I'm only on here visiting some relatives."

In a feeble voice I asked him where he did live then.

The man yawned, and again looked listlessly out of the window.

"Oh," he said, "I live on a farm just out by Leffler's; about six miles out of Burlington. I wish I was back there now."

So did I. So did I. I wished he had never left there.

We didn't talk together any longer. Shortly after that the weather changed, the car grew cold and I went into the smoking car to look for a fire.—Burdette, in Letter to Burlington Hawk-Eye.

A Romance of the Snow Blockade.

The particulars of the affair have just come to my possession, and, although it is to be presumed that the parties most intimately interested have no particular desire to court notoriety on account of their romantic experience, it will do no harm so long as no names are mentioned. It may be stated, however, that the hero of the affair is a bookkeeper in a prominent manufacturing establishment in this city, and that beloved, both wisely and well, a maiden who resided with her parents in a small village a few miles this side of New York City. That she did not entirely discourage his suit may be inferred from the fact that they had decided to marry and become as one on Christmas Day, and every preparation was made for the consummation of their earthly hopes. The ceremony, of course, was to be performed at the young lady's home, and the day before Christmas the expected groom packed his dress suit in a trunk and started for the scene in which he was to play so important a part. But occasionally the best-laid plans are most effectually blocked, and in this case the snow came down to take a little hand in the game. The drifts grew deeper, conductors commenced to look serious and the result may be readily guessed. The train was stuck fast in a snow-drift, the storm was constantly increasing, and the outlook, to say the least, was indeed dubious. Forty miles had the young man to go, but it might as well have been four hundred. As the hours came and went he became desperate, and at last telegraphed to the to-be father-in-law the situation. The reply came: "Come on; we are waiting for you." But the young man couldn't go, and he so intimated over the telegraph wires. At last it came the hour for the ceremony, and guests and relatives had assembled at the house, while the minister was momentarily expected. Only one thing was wanting, and that was the young man who was tearing out his hair in the snow-bank. Everyone knows the impatience existing against postponed marriages, and the bride wept, but without avail, though her tears were warm enough and copious enough to have thawed the snow for twice the distance. Among the guests was a telegraph operator, and in a happy moment he was struck by a bright thought, and he lost no time in communicating it. Distance should be conquered and the couple should be married by the aid of telegraph. The guests were delighted with the suggestion, the bride sobbing, but at last consented to make the experiment. Fortunately, the telegraph office was not far distant, and the wire was soon stretched to the house while the operator got his instruments in order and made a connection. The young man was satisfied of what had taken place and what was about to take place, and instructed to conduct himself accordingly. He was a little dazed by the scheme, but soon recovered, and, taking his place at the side of the operator in the station, he announced that he was ready for business. The minister made the service as short as possible, but the replies came very readily, and were awaited with breathless interest by the assembled company. It was a curious scene, and when at last the minister announced "What love (he was a Unitarian) and the telegraph have joined together let no man cut asunder," there was an enthusiastic round of applause. The young man was not there, and yet he was married. The girl was not within forty miles of the man she loved, and yet she married him. It was the triumph of science over difficulties.—Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat.

A NEWSPAPER office and a theater are in very close contiguity in London. Recently the knights of the quill discovered a pair of pheasants hanging in the manager's window. By the aid of an impressive bishop-set the pheasants passed from the abode of Thespis to the shrine of Minerva. The next move was to send the cards to the manager of the theater, with the request that he would accept a trifling gift of game and an intimation that if he had a private box to spare that evening the donors would be very grateful. The manager promptly responded with a note of thanks and an order for a stage box.

MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

Prof. Gorini is at the present moment in London, employed in superintending the erection of a funeral pyre upon the site belonging to the Cremation Society, near London. A London writer says: "I have had shown to me a photograph in which the colors of Nature are to some extent reproduced. The process is a dead secret. It is easy enough to see that the painting is not by hand, easy enough, too, to detect the photograph. The shading is exquisite. The form is, of course, that of reality. But it is still not Nature exactly, and I suspect the only certain colors—red and green among them—can be educed by chemical combination."

"In spite of the doubtful existence of some of the crises as quoted in the list," says Prof. W. Stanley Jevons, in Nature, "I can entertain no doubt whatever that the principal commercial crises do fall into a series having the average period of 10.46 years. Moreover, the almost perfect coincidence of this period with Brown's estimate of the sun-spot period (10.45) is by itself strong evidence that the planetary connection assumed, and the nature of the connection cannot be established."

—Thus far the borings on the French Coast, in connection with the proposed English Channel Tunnel, confirm the possibility of the execution of the scheme. The geological considerations are all favorable. But there is reason to believe that there will soon be any vigorous and systematic attempt on the part of the English to push forward the enterprise and make its actual accomplishment probable. Lately, influential people in England have grown very apathetic about the great tunnel.

—A very effective glue mixture is said to be employed by Turkish artisans, in the nice work of mounting diamonds and other jewels to their metal settings. In the production of this substance, the method pursued is to dissolve isinglass in a gum mastic, each of the size of a large pea, in as much spirits of wine as will suffice to render it liquid, in another vessel as much isinglass—previously softened in water—is dissolved in brandy as will cover it; and a piece of strong glue, and two small lumps of gum ammoniac, this being rubbed until dissolved. The whole is then mixed with heat, and kept in a vial closely stopped when it is to be used, the vial is set in boiling water. This cement resists moisture, and will indissolubly unite two surfaces of polished steel.—Exchange.

—A plan is now being discussed by English engineers, by which not only the water of the Nile, but that still—of which the greater portion is now wastefully deposited in the Mediterranean Sea—shall be turned to good account as a fertilizer of the deserts of Nubia, Libya and the Soudan. To this end there is proposed the construction of a system of engineering works by which a portion of the Nile flood water, with its annual burden of soil robbed from the Abyssinian slopes of the Abyssinian plateaux, shall be diverted into these deserts, where it may deposit its rich alluvium on the sands, and set to irrigate them, and thus completely transform the desert. This desideratum, it is thought, may be accomplished by the erection of suitable dams and sluices at different points of the Nile, which structures, it is believed, would also improve the navigation of the river.

—In consequence of the continued cost of boxwood and its rapid decrease in quality, English dealers are now using large quantities of our American cornel and persimmon as substitutes, in the manufacture of shuttles. The wood of the first named, though small in size, is hard, heavy, and finely grained, has been largely-used for the handles of tools as well as for shuttle making, and, when properly seasoned, is much superior to Persian boxwood. The same is true of the persimmon, a black-bark tree of the ebony family, growing to a height of fifty to sixty feet, and a diameter of twelve to eighteen inches, having heartwood being of a dark-brown color and very hard. Its special desideratum in the preparation of those woods for shuttle making is that of a very gradual drying. By artificial means—this being more particularly recommended in respect to the cornel—an undue haste in seasoning which having led to prejudice against the wood.—N. Y. Sun.

Beautiful Celestial Phenomena.

A correspondent writing to the New York Evening Post from Brookridge, Minn., gives the following account of celestial phenomena which he recently observed there:

"A remarkable phenomenon was observed here at the beginning of the evening, Jan. 3. The mercury at the signal station on the morning of the 1st of January registered 24 deg., on the 2d 32 deg., and on the 3d 28 deg. below zero. The sky was clear and the short daylight was bright with sunshine on those days. In the early evening of the 3d about six o'clock p. m., the cold being still intense, a very bright circle appeared around the moon, estimated to cover about 5 deg. of the canopy, the moon, not yet at the full, giving off a remarkable effulgence of light, and in its position lacking about 10 deg. of the meridian. Another circle much larger and central to the zenith, nearly as bright as a rainbow in colors, cut the former circle in two places of intersection, and included the brilliant moon within its sweep at equal distances from the crossing of the circle upon each other. Outside of these points of intersection distant from them 1 or 2 deg. was splashed at acute angles across the larger and brighter circle sun-dogs (or moon-dogs) very distinctly painted. The sun chained that morning above the level prairie horizon with a broadly based pyramid of gold whose spire, cathedral-like, was projected upward several degrees, and on either side appeared a like sun-dog pattern somewhat less brilliant but without showing the fiery figure of the sun itself, glowing in the base of its own pyramid enlarged to the eye some forty or fifty diameters. The circles at sunset rising as described appeared almost an hour after the sun had gone below the horizon, and lasted in view no more than twenty or thirty minutes. Were both circles cased by the moon or was the larger one painted about the zenith, refracted from the sun so long passed below the horizon?"

A New Dodge.

"You're a reporter, are you?" inquired a broad-shouldered, stumpy-looking man yesterday. "I was realtin' last thing in your paper about the fellows wot's a-swindlin' bar-tenders with that padlock trick. That's only one out of a hundred tricks the rounders are up to. Here's a new wrinkle: There came into my place the other night a sick-lookin' young feller with nice, but poor-lookin' wife, and they dropped to right away. There was several of the boys in there takin' their nips. By and by the talk got on sleight-of-hand tricks. I see the stranger's eyes begin to glisten, a-sort of as though he'd want to show his hand. He asks for a glass of water, and takes it in his hand. Then he outs with a nice white, perfumed handkercher. Then he inquires 'has any gentleman a half dollar?' Of course one was produced, 'cause the boys want to see what's up next. Then he takes the half-dollar between his fingers, put the perfumed handkercher over both and screwin' the glass. Then he gets one of the company to take hold of a handish thing in the handkercher, which anybody would swear was the half-dollar. 'Now, fer luck,' he says, withdrawin' his own hand. And drop she does, and the jingle is heard plain enough, but you can't see anything, 'cause the handkercher covers the glass. Then the nigger in the woodpile comes in—'I'll bet any gentleman here, the genteel feller says, 'that that half-dollar ain't in the glass.' 'O, git out,' half the boys say, 'why, we heard it drop.' 'Well, I'll bet you a dead surer,' he says, 'why don't you put your stamps up that it is in there?' Then a tinst, thinkin' they had a sore thing of it, two of 'em did bet him a dollar, just for the fun of the thing. Then he lifts off the handkercher and 'fore all crowd around him and peep in the umbler, and nary half-dollar is there. 'I'll be gosh blamed,' see each of the fellers who lost their cash, 'if that ain't wonderfull!' Then his nibs pockets his winnins, and empties his glass of water, but not too quick for me to see that he passed between his fingers a roundish piece of glass, just the size of a half-dollar. That's what I call slick. When that rascal pretended to drop the half-dollar in the glass, he let fall that circular thing, which he must have had concealed in his coat-sleeve leforehand, and substituted it for the half-dollar. Of course, when it fell into the tumbler, it just fitted the bottom, it being transparent, when the fellers looked in they couldn't tell it from the bottom of the tumbler. Maybe they wasn't mad when I told 'em, after he'd gone, about that glass thing;"—Philadelphia Times.

Dr. Busby.

Perhaps some of the boys who read the Companion have heard about the famous old school-master, who lived in England many years ago.

He was what is called a great "disciplinarian." He had the strictest of rules for the government of his school, and woe to the boy who dared to violate them! Why, the very name of "Dr. Busby" will strike terror to the hearts of timid schoolboys in England to this day.

It was a pretty courageous boy who, one day in the doctor's absence from the school-room, found some pipes, and, holding up some in his hand, said, in a loud voice, "I publish the banns of matrimony between this rush and my mouth; if any here present know just cause or impediment why they should not be united, are now to declare it, or ever after hold your peace!" Then he ate them.

The doctor was in an adjoining room, and heard it all, but said nothing until the next morning, when, causing the boy to be "brought up," he grasped the rod and said, "I publish the banns of matrimony between this rod and this boy; if any one here present knows just cause or impediment why they should not be united, let him now declare it, or ever after hold his peace!"

The boy boldly cried out, "I forbid the banns of matrimony in this case!"

"For what cause?" said the doctor.

"Because the parties are not agreed."

The sever but not ill-natured doctor dropped the rod and laughing heartily at the boy's courage and wit, sent him to his seat.—Youth's Companion.

Four or five days will be sufficient for dissolving the resin, when it will be fit for use.

Prices for Potatoes.

At present potatoes are selling in this market for about the same price as wheat, which is some three times the price of corn, and four times the price of oats. In some parts of the country there is a positive famine. It is almost impossible to procure very fine potatoes at any price. The quality of potatoes has fallen off, while the quality of other farm crops has improved during the past few years. The crop most neglected is potatoes. Farmers have apparently lost faith in growing good potatoes. Since the advent of the early rose, no new variety has come into notice of very great promise, and that appears to be running out. The catalogues of seedsmen and nurserymen are full of new varieties of flowers, vegetables, shrubs, vines and trees, but new varieties of potatoes are scarce and of doubtful value. It is certainly high time to have a new potato fever that shall extend all over the country.

The subject of potatoes is rarely mentioned in agricultural papers. No political speaker mention potatoes, though they talk very learnedly about corn and wheat. At many of our agricultural fairs no potatoes are visible except on the table of the eating-houses. The poorest article of food on any table is potatoes. Possibly few farmers raise potatoes that they care to exhibit at fairs. If they have any that they desire to show they would quite likely find that no premium was offered for them—it is certainly astonishing that so little interest is taken in raising fine potatoes, seeing that their quality varies much more than that of any kind of meat, grain or fruit. Good potatoes, dry, mealy, of fine flavor, constitute a luxury. A dish of fair, smooth potatoes is an ornament to any table. Still, while there is improvement in almost everything else that we eat, there is constant deterioration in potatoes. It is time for agricultural societies to give some encouragement to the raisers of potatoes and the originators of new varieties. The country is pretty well stocked with short-horned bulls, and every considerable town supports a rack-track. Prizes for enormous bulls and rapid trotters might give place to premiums for potatoes at least one season. Let there be a string of prizes for potatoes as long as that for pure-bred cattle, and there would be a revival of interest in this neglected tuber that is the delight of every palate. Premiums of considerable amount should be offered for the largest yield and the best quality of distinct varieties, for the greatest number of named varieties, and, above all, for new varieties and varieties brought from other countries. These suggestions are made for the consideration of the managers of agricultural fairs who are now considering the subject of premium lists, with the earnest hope that they will take the matter in hand.—Chicago Times.

Care of Stock.

We hear some farmers say that they believe in bedding stock, but they can't afford straw for this purpose when it brings in market almost as much as hay. Good rye straw doubtless makes the best of bedding, as its large hollow stalks will absorb large amounts of liquid; but straw is not the only substance that will make cattle and other stock comfortable. Dry leaves are an admirable substitute for straw. They are not so good an absorbent, but they make a better manure, and every farmer should save up in the fall a large pile of them. A bed of leaves is always selected by a cow when "leaves have their time to fall," and pigs fattening on mast in the forest make themselves as comfortable in a bed of leaves as ever our grandmothers did in feather beds. Leaves are certainly more wholesome than feathers, as they emit an aromatic odor, whereas feathers often give out a very animal effluvia which is neither pleasant nor healthful.

Another substitute for straw is sawdust. This, in many parts of our country, is thrown away as useless, while in others it is eagerly bought at a cent or two per bushel, and utilized for bedding in the cattle stables. Sawdust makes a dry, soft bed. In itself it does not amount to much as a fertilizer, but when saturated with urine it ferments quickly, and serves to make land more porous and open to the influences of light and air. We have found an unleached ash with a thin coating of sawdust a very good one to spread on grass land. The sawdust made from wood is said to make better manure than that of pine, hemlock or other soft woods, and very possibly it does, as it contains more potash; but soft wood sawdust is more aromatic, and keeps the air of the stable pure. The balsam from pine has a great healing virtues, is excellent for diseased lungs, and, indeed, for all diseased viscera, and no bedding can be better for the feet of horses. There is pine sawdust enough made in the country to supply the wants of every farmer in this land, but the trouble is that it is not made where it is wanted. It will, however, pay for transporting large quantities a considerable distance from most farmers suppose, as it is light stuff—100 bushels of fresh dust can be piled into one load—and we expect to see the time when it will be an article of freight on our railroads. We recommend sawdust for bedding with this capacity, but we are often seen in New York and the confines of Scotland to be present at the interment of a nobleman or gentleman, and in this respect he was in no way biased by party or religion; it was the same to him if he was Whig or Tory, out or in; whether a Roman Catholic or a Protestant, a few years ago, a Free Church or a Presbyterian; they equally commanded his respect and attention, provided the funeral was unpretentious. His highest ambition was to obtain one of the little escutcheons which he considered as so many trophies of his glory, and being known to most of the undertakers, and their constant companion in their peregrinations, they seldom or ever refused his request. Being entirely inattentive to his own affairs, he found himself in a state of distress when he did not expect it yet, though reduced to almost the want of the common necessaries of life, his passion for deathhunting still prevailed, and when he could not ride he walked on foot. But whenever the journey was of any length he bribed the hearse-driver to let him have an inside passenger with the corpse. In this doleful state he traveled more than once; but unfortunately fell a martyr to his strange whim. Being an inside passengeron one of these solemn occasions, in very hot weather, and there being no air-hole, as there usually is, in the hearse, when they took out the corpse they found poor Mr. L. dead from suffocation.—London Times.

RINDERPEST has made its way over the Russian frontier to the neighborhood of Berlin. The disease never dies out in Russia and Poland, and the indemnity paid to the proprietors of infected herds officially slaughtered by Government officers is so very insufficient in those countries that the moment a single ox is found to be diseased there arises the temptation to smuggle the whole herd across the Prussian frontier.

A SENSITIVE youth of Exeter, Eng., recently hanged himself because one young lady of his acquaintance expressed her disapproval of his purpose to marry another young lady. The distressing alternative presented upset his poor brain.

IT speaks for itself, is what a lady said of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup, the other day; for a single bottle cured my child of a most dreadful cough.

Results of Aerial Navigation.

Mr. E. C. Stedman, the poet, writes in the February Scribner of this subject, which he confesses to be his "hobby." The paper is in a half humorous, half serious tone, but discusses practically the causes of failure heretofore and the desiderata of final success. Mr. Stedman speaks thus buoyantly of some of the ultimate results of aerial navigation:

Not only by these processes of construction, but also by the power and freedom gained through their success, a delightful relief influence will be exerted upon the esthetics of life. Poetry and romance will have fresh material and a new locale, and imagination will take flights unknown before. Landscapes painted between earth and heaven must involve novel principles of drawing, color, light and shade. Music, like the songs of Lotiengrin, will be showered from aerial galleys. In every way the resources of social life will be so enlarged that at last it truly may be said, "Existence is itself a joy." Sports and recreations will be strangely multiplied. Rich and poor alike will make of travel an every-day delight, the former in their private aeronaus, the latter in large and uniform structures, corresponding in use to the excursion boats of our rivers and harbors, the "Boating palaces" of the people, and far more numerous and spacious. The ends of the earth, its rarest places, will be visited by all. The sportsman can change at pleasure from the woods and waters of the North, the runways of the deer, the haunts of the salmon, to the pursuit of the tiger in the jungle or the emu in the Australian bush. An entirely new profession—that of airmanship—will be thoroughly organized, employing a countless army of trained officers and "airmen." The adventurous and well-to-do will have their pleasure yachts of the air, and take hazardous and delightful cruises. Their vessels will differ from the cumbrous aerobats intended for freight and emigrant business, will be christened with beautiful and suggestive names—Iris, Aurora, Hebe, Ganymede, Hermes, Ariel and the like—and will vie with one another in grace, readiness and speed.

Bijah and His Boots.

"What on earth ails you this time?" sharply demanded the Court, as Bijah limped across his path to the desk.

"Boots," was the brief reply.

"What boots, you?"

"I want it understood that I've got a new pair of boots, and that they hurt my feet!" answered the justice.

"Where are they now can to me?"

Bijah limped into the corridor and brought out one. He was a little pale around the mouth, and his voice trembled as he said:

"It's plenty big enough, but the heel don't set right."

His Honor looked from the boot to Bijah's foot and back, and a look of horror settled down upon his face as he said:

"Well, I'm now ready to lay down and die! When a man seventy-eight years old, bald-headed, ugly-looking, and with hands as big as wall-baskets, will deliberately try to crowd a No. 13 foot into a No. 7 boot, we might as well go under ground.

"That boot is even too big for me!" persisted Bijah.

"Too big! Too big! Bijah, have you decided in your old age to gain notoriety as a falsifier? Too big! Great guns! but they'll have to have a second story added before you could wear a stocking with 'em!"

Bijah walked away with quivering chin. It hurt right to have anyone abuse another's feet. Feet are something none of us can help, especially big feet. —Detroit Free Press.

Good for Babies.

We are pleased to say that our baby was permanently cured of serious protracted irregularity of the bowels by the use of Ayer Pills. Nothing else will do it. Many other testimonials of remarkable cures by Ayer's Pills are constantly coming to us. Their sugar coating renders them pleasant to take, and they are the best purgative medicine for children.—The Parents, University-ave., Rochester, N. Y. See another column.

THEOLOGICAL students reason that if there be counterfeit money, there must be genuine; so, if there be imitations, there must be true Christians. If this be true of money and religion, will not the same rule apply to "put up" medicines? Do not the cheap and worthless imitations prove that there are genuine and meritorious "put up" medicines? The great popularity of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has resulted in the manufacture of many ghastly alterative and tonic remedies, but one after another these have disappeared, the proprietors having found that, no matter how loud they advertise, success depends upon merit. In South America, as well as in this country, the Discovery is the standard remedy for all scrofulous and eruptive diseases. It acts promptly on the stomach, liver, and blood, toning up, regulating, and purifying the system. It speedily allays all bronchial irritation, and cures the most stubborn cough or cold in half the time required by any other remedy.

A Pleasant Remedy.

Wm. S. Kimball & Co., of Rochester, the manufacturers of Vanity Fair Cigarettes, are making Cigarettes for the cure and relief of Asthma, Catarrh and cold in the head. Many people have used them, and say they are the best and pleasant test remedy yet known. Are purely vegetable, contain no tobacco, and furnish without a doubt, prompt relief. CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor and Proprietor.

TUESDAY, FEB. 4, - - - 1879

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR LONDON LETTER.

New York, Jan. 24, 1879.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

Last week I chronicled the disastrous fire on Broadway which wiped out almost two millions of property. The embers of that conflagration were still smouldering when another occurred nearly one half more destructive in the heart of the dry goods district. In the latter, as in the former case, the peculiarly favorable condition of the weather alone prevented an unparalled catastrophe. These warning calamities have impressed and alarmed the whole city, by showing to what an extent we are at the mercy of the destroying element. The insurance companies, of whom have thus been swept away within a week more than their possible profits for the year thus inauspiciously begun, are naturally greatly aroused, and have just been investigating, through a Committee, the condition of the lower part of the town.

The report of the Committee, shortly to be published, will give some startling facts as to the belt of peril which surrounds the business section of the island, in the shape of the wooden piers and sheds which line the water's edge.

The report states that on the Hudson River front alone there are sixty-two piers of wood, and of this number fifteen have either stationary boilers upon them or boilers upon wheels; on many there are grist mills and elevators, using stationary power, and on ten there are blacksmiths shops in full operation. From the Battery to the foot of Charles street there are upon these piers four and a half miles of wooden sheds. In a few cases the roofs are of corrugated iron, but the sides, and of course the foundation are of light wood. Eight of these piers have absolutely no protection from fire, not even a hydrant or an extinguisher. Nineteen of the piers have no hose upon them, and only seven of the entire number have watchmen provided with watch clocks. The Committee discovered that on the piers where hydrants are placed there is no water at night, it being the custom to shut off the water for fear of its freezing in the pipes. The keys are locked in the office, and water could not be procured without great delay. Upon these piers they discovered not only the most valuable, but the most inflammable goods in the city stored in immense quantities or awaiting shipment. It seems only a question of time, and perhaps of very short time at that, when most of New York has got to go.

The masses of snow which have fallen in the city recently have been terribly obstructive of travel. Double teams to half loads have been the rule with slow progress at that. Our able and efficient Street-cleaning Department didn't seem to notice anything unusual in the appearance or the streets for a week after the snow fell, but at length some one must have told them about it, for they finally made up their minds to clear the incumbrance from the leading thoroughfares. It is no small job to clear Broadway after such a storm, as may be inferred from the fact that it took 1,000 men and 600 carts from daylight till six o'clock in the evening to accomplish it, during which period they shoveled up, carted away, and dumped into the rivers some nine thousand cartloads, weighing close onto two thousand tons.

"The venerable PeterCooper," as the reporters never tire of calling our aged and amiable philanthropist and Greenbacker, whose white-fringed countenance grace the platform of about every other public meeting that is held in New York, and appears above the fesive board at a still larger proportion of our public dinners, is still hearing from his presidential campaign of two years ago. Suit has been pending against him in the State Courts for some time past, in which the plaintiff, a man named Groom, claims $30,000 damage for libel. Groom seems to have occupied the relation to Cooper during that campaign that Stanley Mathews and Sherman did to Hayes, or Pelton and Marble to Tilden: and when all was over, Mr. Cooper accused Groom of misusing his money. The latter felt greatly aggrieved and brought suit, only, however, to be badly defeated. During the trial Mr. Cooper took the stand (figuratively speaking. In point of fact, he sat upon the inevitable air-cushion,) and as he is very apt to do whenever he speaks on any subject, gave a condensed autobiography, informing the Court, among many other particulars, that if he lived he would finish his eighty-eighth year next month. Before he was twenty-one years old he had learned three trades, those of butter, brower, and carriage maker. It was fifty-one years ago he began to aid the laboring classes. In his sixty years of business he could not remember a time when his workmen had to wait for their money; the reason was he had kept clear of banks. Although a candidate two years ago, he had no expectation of being President of the United States. He had paid out a good deal of money for expenses. He could not say how many men he had paid who said they had watched the polls for him on election day. The court-room would not hold them. They had been coming to him ever since for their pay, and were coming yet.

Some detectives in the U. S. Secret Service have successfully accomplished a difficult and delicate job in tracing and arresting a man named Ulrich, said to be the most skillful engraver of counterfeit money in the country. A few years ago he was imprisoned for executing a bogus $100 bill on a Boston bank, so perfect that $1,000,000 of it were put in circulation. He was pardoned out, however, and soon returned to his old occupation. When the raid was made on his house in the little village whither he had been traced he was found at work engraving by hand the geometrical latheswork of the back of a $100 Treasury note, which is done by the Government with a machine that cost $100,000 and which it had been supposed could not be immitated. Ulrich's work, however, was almost perfect.

See what noble ambition the success of the recent predestrian matches here have been able to awaken in the provincial breast! In Paterson a man has started on an attempt to walk 450 miles in six days, resting only three hours each day. In the same town, another enterprising party is endeavoring to gain wealth and reputation by keeping awake for six days. One Mackey, of Passaic, calls himself "Champion Blow Onion Eater of the World." Michael Burns is going to eat against him for $500 "and gate money." Another man wants to "eat a barrel of raw onions against time," claiming that he can do so in four days. And in a day or so, another hero will charge the public an admission fee to see him try to "eat six pounds of raw codfish in two hours." Who can say that the tendencies of the age are not ennobling and refining.

Church organizations have become famous for their ingenuity in devising means for "raising the wind." I don't remember, however, to have heard of anything more striking and original in this line than the scheme now being executed by a suburban Catholic society, to dispose of their church edifice by a lottery, chances one dollar each. Many of your readers happen to want a nice church for any purpose, here is their opportunity.

RADIX

THE Lectanau county Treasurer gets $350 a year.

Tilden says that if he can fix things up in New York Democracy, he is good for 1880.

The Pennsylvania politicians regard the Cameron victory as an assurance of the State for Grant.

Ex- Senator Boutwell is a candidate for the position of Assistant Treasurer of the United States Sub-Treasury of Boston.

Of all personal triumphs of American politicians, the Buffalo Express does not know where to point for a parallel to this third election of Mr. Conkling to the Senate.

The Washington Post, Tramp, says the election of Logan to the Senate is a blighting disgrace. In the days of the rebellion, John A. Logan was assigned to the command of the legions who went down South to visit the gray back fellows of the Tramp, and these gray backs never liked him!

Lieut Gov. Underwood, of Kentucky, is stumping the State in his own behalf making himself popular with the intellectual Kentuckians by fiddling and dancing.

General Grant has lately written to a friend in Washington "I see they are hammering away at the army again. There is no peace for the army except in time of war." A good joke even if the Sphynx did do it.

The New York Tribune thinks that the uniform course of sending nobody but whipped rebels to Congress from the South will give the Democrats the liveliest kind of a circus when these graybacks get into power.

A National bank in Oswego, New York, has suspended on account of too high taxes for the low rates of interest. Yet there are still some who foolishly suppose that national banks make enormous profits and pay little or no taxes.

The Ameer of Cabul, in his flight before the British, is preceded by nine elephants and 2,000 horses, carrying his women, baggage and treasure. These trifling incumbrances are certainly not calculated to facilitate rapid transit.

The question of building a new court house and jail is to be submitted to the people of Montcalm county, this State, at the April election. It is proposed that these buildings shall cost $20,000. Of this sum Stanton citizens pledge themselves to furnish $10,000.

Among the candidates for Sergeant-at-Arms of the Senate is General Corse, the hero of Allatoona, who signaled to Sherman, "I am short a cheek and an ear, but can whip all h— yet." Upon the message to which this was an answer "Hold the Fort" was founded.

Asto Mr. Chandler.

Carpenter, Cameron, Conkling, Chandler.

From the Grand Rapids Eagle.

Says the Cincinnati Times: "The old Senatorial group will be prepared to receive visitors after the 24th of March. Zach Chandler will be missed." Were this a Senatorial election year in Michigan "Zach" would be there.

From the Stanton Herald.

In case the rumor of Christiancy's resignation is correct, the Legislature of Michigan will be certain to elect Zachariah Chandler to fill the vacancy. This will be done in obedience to the emphatic sentiment of the Republican voters of the State.

From the Allegan Journal.

Just give the Michigan Legislature a chance to elect a Senator to Christiancy's place and you will see them set Zach Chandler down into that seat with an alacrity that will astonish the old veteran himself.

From the Battle Creek Journal (National.)

It is now stated, as if by reliable authority, that Senator Christiancy will resign his seat in the Senate and accept the mission to Peru, on account of his health. Of course, this makes the way open for the return of ex Secretary Chandler of the Senate, as there is no doubt that the present Legislature would elect him, in case of a vacancy. There would be an eminent fitness in the appointment of Judge Christiancy to a judicial position, and many have expected that one would be tendered him. The question of health, however, seems to have determined his choice in another direction.

THE TELLER INVESTIGATION AT NEW ORLEANS.

IN LOUISIANA.

Before the representatives appointed by the committee, N. J. CHAMBERS, a member of the Legislature for Natchitoches, testified. The general issue of the testimony of witnesses on the Republican side is to the effect that there was a conspiracy on the part of the Democrats to break up negro meetings by violence; that, such treatment being unspeakably fatal, there was no organized fraud such as described, acting against Blount; and others was taken for protection, they being threatened to get the negroes together and burn the town; it was reported that Blount had only one or twelve armed men there in his house; that the consultation concluded it would not be safe to attempt to protect Blount, and witness was asking Chief of Police, the affair was quietly managed, no violence or disturbance was contemplated. It was agreed on the purpose of preserving the peace then no orders were issued to any one; that witness was also warned by Blount and wife; witness considered Blount's life in the most fearful danger; then he ever described, acting against Blount; and others was taken for protection, they being threatened to get the negroes together and burn the town; it was reported that Blount had only one or twelve armed men there in his house; that the consultation concluded it would not be safe to attempt to protect Blount, and witness was asking Chief of Police, the affair was quietly managed, no violence or disturbance was contemplated. It was agreed on the purpose of preserving the peace then no orders were issued to any one; that witness was also warned by Blount and wife; witness considered Blount's life in the most fearful danger; then he ever described, acting against Blount; and others would be taken from the Sheriff's hands. The prisoners were taken from the Sheriff's hands. The testimony of witness throughout was contradictory on many points. Witness was a Democrat, a planter, and others being advised to leave the parish, but still remained. He thought the Democratic leaders expressed an opinion as to whether it would be safe for Packard to return; they were of great importance to the white people of the parish.

IN SOUTH CAROLINA.

The committee (consisting of Senators Teller, Kirkwood, Johnston, Randolph and McDonald) began an investigation at Charleston on the 24th. All the witnesses examined were from Charleston County.

A. N. Gregg (colored), Republican and United States Supervisor at the late election, testified that the election was quiet, when the polls closed at 4 P. M. Witness then went to the Court House to look at the box, and that there were 15,000 votes in the box. Witness could not say whether the excessive votes were counted or rejected. The Democratic Clerks were at the Court House, and had a majority of those on duty. Witness was present when the votes were counted, as required by law. Witness believed that a majority of those on duty were Democrats. Witness was not present when the votes were counted.

Mr. Hutchinson (colored), Republican, testified that he was at the polls in St. James Goose Creek precinct, at the election, and saw the box opened and the votes counted by the managers. There was a majority of votes for Republican tickets. Witness knew Republican votes; he knew colored men who voted the Democratic ticket; other colored men told him they voted the Democratic ticket; witness counted all colored people who voted the Democratic ticket. [Here the witness was directed to state the names of colored Democrats from other wards voted at the Fairchild Engine House; he colored man had a witness that means must be furnished of voting secretly.] By Senator Johnston—Engine House; witness was present when the votes were counted; he knew the tickets were counted as they were taken out of the box; he knew the tickets were taken out of the box; he knew the tickets were counted; he knew the votes were counted; he knew the votes were counted; he knew the votes

DIED.—Mrs. Hahnna Campbell, wife of the late Orrin Campbell, of Eveline Township, this county, died on Thursday. Her funeral took place at the M. E. Church in that village Sunday, and was largely attended.

—Frank Campbell, aged 15, a son of the above, died yesterday.

GEN. T. J. TRUE, well known to Charlevoix people, has been spending the past week in our village. The General always feels at home here, and our citizens enjoy his visits. We hope the time may soon come again when Charlevoix may claim him as a permanent resident.

INCORPORATION.

Our Citizens Express Themselves in Favor of It.

Although the weather was stormy and disagreeable, quite a goodly assemblage of our people was at the school house Saturday evening to talk about the matter of incorporating the village.

Quite a number of leading citizens addressed the meeting on the subject, setting forth the advantages to be derived, and the comparative inexpensiveness of living under the proposed regime. The following resolution was voted upon.

Resolved, That it is the sense of this meeting that Charlevoix should be incorporated the present winter.

There were but two votes against the adoption of this resolution.

A committee, consisting of Messrs Eaton, Bolters and Bell, were appointed to determine the boundary lines of the proposed incorporation.

A petition will go to Lansing to-day, praying for the passage of an act incorporating the village under the general law. Several special clauses will be asked for, which seem to be necessary in our case the most important of which is that highway labor shall be laid out the same as heretofore, under the direction of the Highway Commissioner and Overseer of Highways of the Township.

ED. SENTINEL.—Please locate Scribner one town west, and relieve Spring vale.

NILES.

Charlevoix, through her representative, has applied for incorporation. Pain is eminently just and proper, and as we can see many good and valid reasons why Charlevoix, like Petoskey, would be benefitted by incorporation, but the thought has occurred to us that at the present rate of progression, not many years will elapse in this part of the State, ere it will be impossible for a man to swing a cat by the tail, without hitting some president, trustee, or other municipal officer.—Petoskey Record

The Little Traverse Independent expects soon "to give definite particulars in regard to several new and important enterprises." The same paper has the following: "Two weeks ago Friday three men started from the Island of Mackinac to cross on the ice to Old Mackinac. They have not since been heard from, and as the ice was unsafe at the time it is supposed that all were lost."

I. O. O. F.—Last November the inhabitants of Springvale, Charlevoix county, raised the largest log structure in this country, for the joint purpose of a school house and Odd Fellow's Hall. The building is two full stories in height, and since that time has been finished off in good style, making warm, comfortable, and roomy apartments, provided with all the necessary appliances required for the different purposes to which they are to be assigned. On Thursday of this week they are to dedicate it. A good time is expected.

BUILDING ENTERPRISE.

The Sentinel, Western Union Telegraph, Postoffice, and Masonic Fraternity to go into New Quarters this Spring.

We state some time ago that we had purchased the lot occupied by us, with the ultimate view of erecting thereon new offices for our use.

We are now enabled to state that a definite arrangement has been made whereby the publisher of this paper, in conjunction with the Masonic Fraternity of Charlevoix, are to erect, the coming spring, a fine commercial building, which will be 22x55 feet on the ground, and 24 feet between joists.

The first story will be erected by W. A. Smith, and will be occupied by him as follows: The front part, which will be furnished with a glass front, will be 22x20, and will be occupied as a post office. In this room, also, we shall open a news and stationery establishment, which we shall take great pains to make a source of convenience and pleasure to the public, as well as of profit to ourself. Public access to the Western Union Telegraph office will also be furnished in this room.

The remaining portion of this floor will be occupied by the SENTINEL. A private editorial room 12x12 will be fitted up in this part, and telegraphic instruments placed upon our editorial table. We shall make our part of the building convenient and neat in all respects.

Charlevoix Lodge No. 282, Ancient, Free & Accepted Masons, will occupy the upper story, and occupy it as their permanent Masonic home. The main hall will be 21x39 inside, and will have an arched ceiling, fourteen feet high in the center. Commodious anterooms will occupy the east end of the floor, and the whole will be reached by a flight of stairs inside the building on the west end.

The building will have a square front, and will be substantially and neatly constructed in all respects. It is intended to make it an ornament as well as a convenience to the village. The contracts have been let for putting the foundation timbers on the ground, and for the manufacture of the door and window frames, and the work will be pushed with the utmost expediency as soon as spring opens.

Agents from prominent "Resorters" of Kalamazoo, are to the effect that they will be here earlier the coming season than last, and in stronger force. They will commence early to set out shade trees, and otherwise improve their grounds.

P. W. WILSON, of Kalamazoo, writes us as follows: "Through the SENTINEL I weekly hear from you and our Charlevoix friends. Am surprised that while the mercury has been 17 degrees below zero here, the lowest in Charlevoix has been nine above. We who belong to the 'Resort' are in a hurry for the time to come when we may return to your pleasant town, greet the friends made last year, and enjoy your pure air and fine scenery. Prof. Edward Olney of Michigan University, has joined our Association, and will erect a cottage next summer."

A MELANCHOLY EVENT.—Last week we mentioned that Wm. Mason, of Marion, had been seriously injured in the Cheboygan lumber woods. We little thought that this week we should be compelled to record his death. Such, however, is the solemn fact. Mr Mason was not only seriously injured, but was a great distance from Cheboygan, and was twenty hours without surgical aid. The strain upon his system was too great, and death relieved his sufferings. His wife, who had hastened to his bedside upon information of the accident, arrived too late to see him alive. The mournful cortege passed through here Friday on its way to Marion. The funeral was held in the Barnard school house on Saturday. Rev Mr. Whitman, of this place, preaching the discourse. Mr. Mason was not only well known and respected in his own town, but had many warm friends in Charlevoix. He was an industrious, honest, and agreeable gentleman, the loss of whom all who knew him will mourn.

SHALL THE INDIAN BUREAU BE TRANSFERRED?

The Joint Congressional Committee Equally Divided on the Question—Report of Those Members Favoring the Proposed Change.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 26.

The Joint Congressional Committee appointed to consider the advisability of transferring the Indian Bureau from the Interior Department to the War Department, yesterday morning voted on the subject, with the following result: Against transfer, Senators Saunders and Oglesby, and Representatives Stewart and Voorhees—3. In favor of the transfer, Senator McCreery and Representatives Senles, Hooker and Bonne—4. After the vote, a controversy arose as to which of the two reports should be given precedence in the presentation to Congress. The opponents of the transfer claim that its advocates, failing to obtain a majority, must consider theirs the minority report, as an amendment offered to an existing law fails upon a tie vote. Senator Saunders and others favored authorizing the President at his discretion to turn over to the War Department the control of any tribe or tribes that might be in rebellion, or giving trouble, or such tribes as the President might think best at this time, and that he was in favor of the Sioux being transferred at once, with the proviso that such transfer shall not effect the school or farming interests, etc.

The report of the four members who favor the transfer has just been completed by Representative Boone, and will be submitted to the House the first opportunity. The principal features of the document are as follows:

The history of our management of Indian affairs and our treatment of the Indians is one of shame and mortification to all right-thinking and liberal-minded men. A proper solution of the "Indian problem" is pressing itself more strongly upon the public attention every year, demanding the immediate attention of Congress, and cannot, with either safety to the Indians or honor to the government, be longer deferred. The failure on the part of our Government to discharge its duty to the Indians is not confined to the last few years. Our wrongful treatment dates in a co-equal with our existence, though not to the same extent in the earlier and plainer days as at present. During all the years past complaints have been made of violated pledges, broken treaties, and lack of efficient and responsible management. Indeed, the system of the management of the Indian affairs we have pursued (if we have had a system at all) has been unequal to the demands of our duty. Nor has it met the expectations of its instigators and advocates, and to such an extent have these wrongs been multiplied, and to such extent have frauds and peculations crept into the management of Indian affairs, and so glaring and shameful have these become that honorable indignant public opinion will not longer look on with indifference and unconcern, but demands that these matters be righted here, and the wrongs, so far as possible, be righted, and that a policy be adopted which will conform with the dignity and character of our Government, and secure at the same time full and ample justice to a suffering and outraged people.

That these wrongs and abuses do now exist, and to a fearful extent, we think no one at all acquainted with the facts will deny. If proof upon this point were wanting or demanded, we have but to refer to the statements of all who have investigated the question, and those familiar with our present management, and to those who are to-day strenuous advocates of the present system, and who ask its continuance, and who seem to believe in its ultimate success.

To cut back into the history of this question, it will be found that our system of Indian management has always been, virtually and in effect, the system now in force. Even while it was nominally under the War Department, prior to 1849, the system was never more the same as now. We are aware that the general impression is, that before that time a different system prevailed, and the change to that year, to the Interior Department, was a radical change in the system; but such is not the case, and while it is true that Superintendents and Agents, being few in number, made reports to the War Office, it is also true that neither the Secretary of War nor any officer in the War Department had anything to do with the appointment of these officers, and the War Office charged with the duty of executing them, or controlling them in any manner, prior to 1834. While, in this act of 1834, the Secretary of War was given a sort of general supervisionence of the conduct of Agents and Sub-Agents (appointed by the President), and while by that act the President was authorized to select military men to discharge the duties of Indian Agents, it is further true that a large majority of the Agents selected were taken from civil life, and until the same time no machinery was employed in the conduct of Indian affairs as now.

We claim that the Indian management has ever been substantially at least as at the present time. Therefore, whatever of failure or wrongs have characterized our management in the past are justly chargeable to our present system, and whatever of success has attended this management should be credited to that system. Year after year large amounts of money have been expended with a view to civilizing these people, and yet failure is written upon every page of the past history of our efforts in this direction. The appointment of the peace policy in 1869 by President Grant, in the opinion of the undersigned, was a virtual admission that the Indian Bureau was incapable of the proper conduct of Indian affairs, and was compelled, therefore, to delegate much of its authority to other hands. From the show of progress made in civilizing, educating and Christianizing the Indians, to which your committee has had their attention called while among them last fall, there is no room to doubt that we should try some method of dealing with this question different from that now in vogue. The growing accounts of the rapid strides of the Indians in the way of civilized life, and their rapid march to the standard of civilization, are not borne out by facts. Shameful irregularities and gross frauds have crept into every branch of the Indian Service. No one is to be found with the Indians for a day but the history of such frauds is visible on every page of Indian management for the last score or more of years. Indeed, so flagrant are the frauds and so defiant have been the perpetrators become, that it appears a notorious fact that a ring exists, composed of contractors, employes of the bureau and weak and influential persons outside, whose object is to wrest the said defraud both the Government and the Indians. The opinion entertained by the undersigned is that these frauds will forever exist, even with the most vigilant, scrupulous honesty which can be brought into the management of the Indian bureau, because we believe the method or system of that department is inadequate to prevent fraud, however honest the head of the office may be, and for the reason that the system of accountability in the department is not close enough to detect corruption.

We are asked the very pertinent question whether or not the same abuses and frauds would be practiced if the management should be transferred to the War Department. We think not, for a fair and very plain and obvious reason, to-wit: Whatever else may be said of our army officers, they are, as a class, men of high honor and strict integrity. Their training has impressed these high qualities upon them, and their association requires their constant observance. Every officer in the army is a check upon every other officer, and such is the system of accountability in the army that it is nearly if not quite impossible for an officer to act dishonestly without being detected, and upon being detected, punishment follows swiftly and surely. With civil Agents this is not the case. They are appointed generally as partisans and for a limited time, subject at any time to removal, paid small salaries, and can only hope to hold their position a few years at the most, and hence have not the same inducements to act honestly and fairly that an army officer has. We do not undertake to say that the War Department has such perfect management that abuses will occur in its administration also, but we think it compares favorably with any other department, and that fewer instances of dishonest practices have been fatal to its charge than to almost any other branch of the public service.

Next to the question of absolute justice to the Indians, comes that of the comparative cost of the two systems, and we are decidedly of the opinion that a large amount of money can and will be saved, if the transfer be made. It, the committee say, it be true that army officers can perform the duties of Indian Agents as faithfully, diligently and honestly as civil agents have, and are doing; and if the War Department can purchase as cheaply as the Indian Bureau, and if the means of transportation in the War Department are much superior, and if the systems of inspection are equal; and if army officers are not so apt to become victims of temptation; and if we can secure more faithful and honest administration through such army officers, and thereby avoid some, if not all, the Indian wars—we say, if these, or any number of these, propositions be true, then who can say that we shall not save millions of dollars in our Indian management if this transfer is made, and at the same time secure justice to the Indians, the lack of which has caused so much trouble?

The report concludes:

We believe the interest of the Government and the good of the Indian will be best promoted by transferring the management of Indian affairs to the War Department, leaving it discretionary with the Secretary of War to appoint civil Agents to those agencies which, in his judgment, the interest of all concerned will be best served by such Agents, and officers of the army, where the interests of the service require it.

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

—There are two Congregational Churches in St. Petersburg, Russia, and neighborhood, both of which have English Congregational ministers as pastors.

—The dissenting ministers of Rochester and Chatham, Eng., have resolved to officiate at no weddings on Sunday, nor will they conduct funerals on the Lord's-Day unless there is a medical certificate that himself indignant public opinion will not longer look on with indifference and unconcern, but demands that these matters be righted here, and the wrongs, so far as possible, be righted, and that a policy be adopted which will conform with the dignity and character of our Government, and secure at the same time full and ample justice to a suffering and outraged people.

—The Presbyterian Board of Missions complains of a large falling off in its receipts. It began the present financial year with a debt of $47,329, and the receipts of the past eight months are more than $8,000 smaller than for the same period last year. There has been a gradual decline since 1875.

—The forthcoming Baptist "Year Book" for 1879 will show that there are now in the United States 2,102,691 Baptists, an increase of nearly 78,000, with 1,075 associations, 21,926 churches, an increase of about 600, and 14,626 ordained ministers, an increase of 398. The baptisms for the year numbered 162,236.

—President Hurst, of Madison University, thinks that the present interest in scientific subjects in their relation to religious truth is likely to result in the importance of heroic efforts for the conversion of souls to be overlooked, and on this point says: "It takes ten minutes, on some Sunday mornings, to announce mathematic Huxley; ten mere to knock Farrar's 'Eternal Hope' to pieces; ten more to do away with purgatory, and about five to wind up on the 'Second Coming.' What is going to become of the poor unconverted soul who has drifted into the service with his bereavements and broken future and penitent feelings?"

—A liberal friend of the great work of the American Sunday-School Union in the Northwest has supported a missionary of the Union for two years past, and the following is the first result of his investment: Sixty new Sunday-Schools established in new or destitute settlements; 197 men and women enlisted as teachers; 1,620 children and youth brought in as scholars; 901 have professed faith in Christ; 19 churches have been formed; and 517 persons were supplied with the Scriptures. At the outlay of less than $1 per scholar those children have been placed under Bible instructions at the critical time in their lives. Three thousand one hundred and ninety-one such Sunday-Schools have been established by the Union in the Northwest since 1870.

—It has been estimated that there are in the State of New York no fewer than 5,400 ecclesiastical organizations of all denominations, encapsuling nearly as many edifices, which furnish seats for over 2,600,000 persons, and having an enrolled membership of 1,300,000 in round numbers. The aggregate value of these church-edifices and the lots which they occupy is about $101,119,000, to which should be added, say, $16,500,000, the value of the parsonages and other real estate belonging to the various denominations. The Methodist Episcopal Church is the most powerful one in the State, all things considered. It has the largest number of organizations, the largest number of edifices, the largest number of sittings, and pays its clergymen 20 per cent. more money in salaries than any other denomination.

—An Interolligiate Conference has been established, to promote religious work in the colleges. Correspondence has been opened with 350 colleges of the United States and Dominion of Canada, and 1,000 letters have been exchanged by the students in 100 of these institutions. The Secretary of the Conference has visited twenty-five colleges in New England, the Middle States, Virginia and Minnesota, carrying to them the suggestions of the Conference. The Secretary has also not not less than 200 students, in eight different States and Territories of the Young Men's Christian Association, and conferred with them about the interests of the work. An investigation by the Secretary has led to the following estimate, namely: Among the 50,000 students, about 25,000 are professing Christians, and less than 8,000 are engaged even nominally in any kind of active work. As a result of the work done, about 1,000 conversions are reported. During next May, another College Conference will be held in Baltimore. N. Y. Evening Post.

MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

—Electric carriage lamps a French inventor proposes to produce, so that ordinary carriages drawn by horses will be illuminated by electricity supplied by the rotary motion of their wheels, locomotives while in motion will light up the trains they draw, and steamships supply themselves with powerful lights.

—The Indian maxim that the heaviest and finest seeds lead to produce the finest plants has found support in the observations and tests made by Mr. A. S. Wilcox, of Cincinnati. Large seeds gave a product of two pounds seven ounces per seed, against two pounds one and one-fourth ounces in the case of small seeds.

—California cactus is one of the newest articles from which paper is to be made, and a process has been patented in Germany by a Mr. Nordlinger, of Stuttgart, for rendering the fiber of the hog plant sufficiently tractable for the purpose. The leaves and other parts are boiled in water and soap for three-quarters of an hour, thoroughly washed, and then boiled in very much diluted acetic acid. The fibers are then washed, dried and combed, and are then ready for working.

—Several French veterinarians assure us that pulmonary consumption is quite a common disease among cattle, and that it may be communicated from one animal to another by taking the germs with the food. We are also told that the milk of animals thus affected may contain the germs which are readily transmitted to human beings partaking of their milk or flesh; also, that they can be readily got rid of sufficient to destroy these germs. With the trichina in pork and germs of consumption in beef and mutton, it is a marvel that the human race has not long since perished. Still a few do live to a good old age in spite of their numerous parasitic enemies.

—It is estimated by chemists who have carefully investigated the subject, that thousands of barrels of what is known as terra alba, or white earth, are every year mixed in various forms and by ingenious methods with commercial sugar and sold in many substances—the use of the article tending, of course, to produce stone, kidney complains and various diseases of the stomach. It is also used in confectionery very extensively, and various substances are also manufactured in addition, for coloring confectionery. Regularly-established mills are now in operation, grinding white stone into a fine powder, and graded, it is said, for use in the preparation of soda, sugar and flour.—Exchange.

—The causes of snea frequent failure and leaking in dismal iron thecastnes of tubular steam boilers Prof. Hayes attributes to the deposits found in those tubes, both before and after they have failed. These tubes are cleaned at intervals, when the boilers are in use, with cylindrical wire brushes, and when cold by dirt or a little wood is drawn out by these brushes the tubes may be considered to be in good condition. But there are frequently deposits in the tubes that are pasty in places and roll along under the cleaning brush like pieces of dough, or the quantity of dry powder deposited in the tubes may be quite large; in such cases, says Prof. Hayes, there is danger of rapid corrosion and pitting

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, Jan 31, 1879

EDITOR SENTINEL.

The temperance question is, perhaps, the most difficult to deal with of all the social problems. Everything alcoholic, under the generic name of "Rum," appeals, in a greater or less degree, to the cravings of an overwhelming majority of our population; but a respectable minority are its bitter enemies. Hundreds of devoted men have dedicated their lives to warfare upon it. The Francis Murphys plead and declaim against it. The John B. Goughs hurl the myriad shafts of wit, sarcasm, eloquence, and impassioned denunciation against it; the Neal Downs, the Crosbys and the Cotters, legislate and organize against it. But, after all, it must be conceded that, by their results, the struggles of all these would be exterminators of alcohol irresistibly suggest the polemic efforts of the immortal Miss Partington, to "sweep back the Atlantic Ocean with a broom." What is the matter? Intemperance being a freely acknowledge evil, can nothing more direct be done to mitigate it?

The solution of this question is about to be once more attempted here in New York, and in a somewhat novel way. The experimentors on this new line have watched the labors of the enormous promising total abstainers, and seem to have reached the conclusion that total abstinence may come as part of the millennium, but is also not too much to hope for at the present day. The result is that the certificate of incorporation of an association to be known by the title of "The Business Men's Society for the Encouragement of Moderation" has this week been filed in the County Clerk's office. The purposes of the society, as stated in the certificate, are to encourage moderation in the use of alcoholic beverages; to promote a knowledge of science and statistics relative to the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors; to disseminate among the people useful information regarding the principles into practical effect. The society intends to prepare and furnish to applicants either of three forms of pledges, to wit: A total abstinence pledge, operative for one year, and renewable by notice at the will of the pledger; a moderation pledge, binding the person who takes it not to drink during business hours; and finally, a unique engagement meant to prevent the person taking the pledge from partaking of intoxicating liquors at the expense of another person, and from extending an invitation to any other person to drink at his expense. The society is also to exert its influence to induce retail liquor dealers to provide for teetotalers stimulating and nourishing beverages which contain no alcohol. Still another purpose of the society is to encourage the establishment of places of cheap recreation and amusement where no intoxicating liquors shall be sold. The society will begin operations at once, and its term of existence is fixed at twenty years. The incorporators of the society are well-known citizens, and it seems to me, if its affairs are wisely and vigorously managed, that it may render good practical service to the temperance cause.

Brother Talmadge, the athletic and agile exhorter of the Brooklyn Tabernacle, has a lively time of it at present. He preaches widely advertised sermons on the terrible "gilded vice" of New York, and most of the other prominent American cities (Brooklyn always excepted,) draws great crowds to laugh and applaud his variety performance; and then, when he pantingly pauses for echoes of commendation from his clerical brethren, hears only stern rebuke and denunciation, followed up by a rumor, now current, that the Brooklyn Presbytery will be called upon to discipline him for unseemly behavior. He labors frantically to wipe out his church debt, and only a little while after he has held a glorification meeting to celebrate the accomplishment of his task, is made a party to a lawsuit in which the testimony is uncomfortably strong that some of his subscriptions were obtained under false pretenses, and that instead of his Tabernacle being free from debt, it owes from sixty to seventy thousand dollars. Then, to is all the white subject to the merciless lampoons and caricatures of a ribald press, and in every way takes the penalties of greatness in heroic doses. I believe, however, that there is not any truth in the vague report that Bro. Talmadge is going to escape these perscentions by resigning the ministry to accept a flattering star engagement with a combined circus and minstrel troupe.

A recently revived project to lay a street railroad in Broadway, from the Battery to Union Square, elicits from one of our prominent Sunday papers a column of reminiscences regarding the street, which the writer eulogizes after this wise: "There is probably not a more widely-known city road in the world than this. Even the street, which two thousand years ago, and probably a thousand years before that, was "called straight," in Damascus, is at the end of all these centuries, almost unknown in comparison with the way which was called broad only two hundred years ago, at one end of a little island, at the other of which might be found the aboriginal savage; and even of the streets of the great capitals of Europe those is not one the name of which is so familiar to all the dwellers within the bounds of civilization." The scheme of putting cars tracks in so crowded and splendid a thoroughfare, is one that richly deserves defeat, and yet it seems already to have been of some use to the community, for almost immediately upon the renewed discussion of the subject, the stage lines have dropped their rate of fare to five cents, the lowest pernment figure it has ever touched. Before the way, the stages were the great public conveyances. The fare was then six cents. When the war began, their tariff shared in the general inflation, going up to ten cents, where it remained unchanged until within a year, when the elevated railroads made such a reduction in their receipts that they commenced to sell seventeen tickets for a dollar. This proved to be hardly reduction enough, and now with the added possibility of such formidable competition as a street road, the price has dropped to hard pan, and in future the great, white, lumbering institutions which were for so many years the pride of aristocratic New York and the terror of timid pedestrians at the street crossings, will drop their exclusive airs and carry the common herd "at prices to suit the times." There are now running some 200 states on Broadway, and since the reduction they are so heavily patronized that more will have to be added immediately. RADIX

GEN. GRANT.

The Ex-President as a Statesman and as a Gentleman.

Ex-secretary Fish to N. Y. Tribune Pump.

"Grant," said his former prime minister, "is underestimated in this country. He is not only a man of ability and firmness in character, and of unwavering patriotism, but I never knew any man more generous in his judgements, more open to conviction, and who loves so little his own opinion when it was shown to conflict with the public interests. There were times that you had to make him see that he was wrong, and do it by argument. But I have known him to change his views, on both personal and political things, when he had entertained them with the greatest stubbornness."

"Were your relations with the President always mild and even?"

"There were some things which the President saw differently from my view. Our intercourse, however, was never ruffled by ill-temper. I found before I went into his Cabinet that he was a man who meant to serve the country and not himself alone, and I addressed myself at times to that latent element in his nature. I have said to him: 'General, you will not think to-morrow on this question as you do to-day.—I don't believe you will.' He never repelled discussion, and listened to every point advanced, even in favor of men he did not like."

"I desire to ask you, Mr. Fish, if the current criticism on Gen. Grant's manners and gentility is founded on anything real?"

The Foreign Secretary looked up as if glad to answer it, and said:

"Grant was innately a gentleman. If you were to place him in a certain circle of society people, such as exist in some of the exclusive parts of this city, it might be said there that he had too little of the manner, and did not dance, nor flatter nor play the elegant creature as well as he might. That is the view some hold of a gentleman. But when you come to the natural graces of the heart, kindness and thoughtfulness, an ingenuous and open spirit, respect for good women and truthful man, there was about him all of that which makes the man. Many of his critics, mere fastidious, might have learned from him that imputation is no part of a gentleman. I repeat that he is underestimated. I have in my mind a range of nearly half a century of public men whom I know; he has as much of my respect as any of them."

CLIPPINGS.

Judah P. Benjamin has found a place as Queen's counsel, in London, worth $150,000 a year. Virtue to its own reward.

The Richmond Dispatch says it a great gain to exchange Rome for Carpenter. Glad you like it. We strive to please.

A New York paper says the return of Gen. Logan to the United States Senate has created universal satisfaction among the Republicans of New York.

Counterfeit $4 Canadian bills are said to be now mostly circulating in the States. A pretty safe rule will be to refuse all foreign paper currency.

The Greencastle Terre Haute Express, pulling away the veil of futurity, sees Grant and Tilden arrayed against each other in 1880, with Grant the winner.

The election of Matt Carpenter to the Senate convinces the Pittsburg Dispatch that the matter of opposition to, or support of the President, does not enter into the elections in Wisconsin.

Frank Moulton they made an address at a Brooklyn church fair, in favor of a fence at private rate, saying that he believed in keeping ministers in. He's a thundering religious chap, that Moulton is.

Gen. Sherman had a grand reception at Atlanta the other day. Thousands of citizens came out to meet him, though the military turnout was nothing like that which greeted him at his visit in 1861.

With the gathering of Logan, Clarkling, Carpenter and Patterson, the Boston Herald is bound to convince that all the pretensions of a Grant campaign are not confined to Democratic newspapers.

Col. Dudley Mann, a self-exiled Southern rebel, is living in good style at Chantilly, near Paris. There is room in that vicinity for Jeff Davis, Bob Toombs and 5000 others the same sort if they want to go.

Whist with the 13th, 14th, and 15th amendments, the rebel war claims, the ironclad oath, the ciphers, Gen. Banks, Ben. Hill, and other elements of disturbance all pressing at once, the Cincinnati Gazette regards it as a sadly torn up Democracy.

When Charles M. Brennan and Miss Meta Perch stood before the Rev. Father Pelletier at the altar of Francis Xavier Church in New York, to be married Wednesday night, the priest commenced a congratulatory address, and fell forward, dead of heart disease.

James Freeman, once a leading lawyer of Wisconsin, and important a citizen of Racine that the Common Council has passed a special enactment which prohibits all liquor dealers from giving, selling, lending, or permitting him to have liquor in any way, shape, or manner.

The Ministry also called and offered to resign, but the President requested them to remain in office for the present. The French Ambassador at the Court of St. James, the Marquis D'Harcourt, telegraphed his resignation also. On the Bourse there was a slight fall in the price of public securities. To-day the following is the full text of President MacMahon's letter:

"At the opening of this session of the Chambers the Ministry presented to you a programme which, while affording satisfaction to public opinion, appeared to the Cabinet such as might be voted without danger to the security or good administration of the country. Failing souls all personal views, I had given the programme my complete adhesion, for I was convinced, although with entire faithful conscience commanded me to remain faithful to the Constitution. To-day the Ministry, thinking it its duty to respond to the opinion of the majority in the Chamber of Deputies, proposes to me to resign to the military commands some general measures, which I consider contrary to the interests of the country, and consequently to those of the country. I cannot subscribe to them. Any other ministry taken from the majority would impose on me the same conditions. I consider myself therefore bound to shorten the duration of the mandate which the National Assembly confided to me and I therefore tender my resignation.

"In quitting power, I have the consolation of thinking that during the fifty-three years I have devoted to the service of my country, as soldier or citizen, I have never been guided by sentiments other than by absolute devotion to my country. I request you to communicate my decision to the Chambers.

"MACMAHON, Duke of Magenta."

A bill for the relief of Mrs. Lincoln was introduced by Mr. Kasson, and referred. TO THE DELIVERY.

Arrest of Ex-Parties who Broke Jail and Liberated Moore—Escape of them Almost Immediately.

The village was given good deal startled Thursday by the announcement of the arrest of the parties who broke into the jail and released the non Moore. No one made great ado on account of the arrest of the three, of who were the parties previous. Newell Bradley and John Cummings were arrested for the offense upon information which the officers received from Moore, and upon being arrested Cummings revealed the whole plot. The fact, as we learn them from the statements of Moore and Cummings on the examination of the latter Tuesday are somewhat as follows: The plan originated was that Cummings should, during church service on Sunday night, break the lock on the door and thus liberate Moore, who should then be assisted by Bradley in Row, Mr. Bradley's team. When time enough had elapsed to accomplish this Bayrd, who was then confined in jail awaiting examination, should go to Under Sheriff Peppard's house and tell him that Moore had been taken away by two men in a sleigh. This plan was successfully carried out, and the officers thus put on the wrong trail for nearly. Darrell was induced to play the part he did, by the promise that if his examination resulted in bringing bound over to the circuit court, he would be liberated also. Moore remained in St. Ritter's farm from Sunday night until the following Saturday night, when he left for Petoskey, being furnished with provisions by Bradley during his journey in the barn. The examination of Cummings resulted in his being bound over to the Circuit court for trial in the sum of $500. Being unable to secure bail he was committed to jail. Bradley's examination was postponed until Monday, pending which he was bound under the same bond, with Dr. Gross and Mr. Rafer as sureties. Wednesday Dr. Gross, learning that Bradley had said he would not be one Monday, turned him over to the Sheriff and he was lodged in jail. The officers from the first find their suspicions, and strong ones, regarding who were the guilty parties, and it was a source of their desire to bring them to punishment, that they took the trouble they did to secure Moore. The matter has been well conducted on their part, as the result shows.

It is but justice to state that Bradley denies all complicity in the matter, but the full facts in the case will, probably, appear in his examination.—Cheboygan Tribune.

Money to Loan, on good real estate security. Inquire of A. R. Upright, Charlevoix Mich. 16-1yr

Only think of it! Little Ann Rogers, of Niles, is about eight years old and is already heiress to half a million.

The next meeting of the Grand Lodge of Michigan Masons will be held at Detroit, the ninth Tuesday in January, 1880.

A bill was introduced in the House of Representatives last Monday, appropriating $5,000 to meet the requirements of the Arrearsed Pension act.

The subject of the extension of the Grand Rapids and Indiana Railroad from the M. E. Camp Grounds to Mackinaw, via Little Traverse, is again being revived.

The bill for extending the time for the construction of the Marquette & Mackinaw railroad, two years, has been passed by the House. The Senate will doubtless concur.

The long fight in the Senate over the New York appointments is ended by their confirmation by a vote of 33 to 24. This is a temporary victory for the President and certainly Sherman and a defeat for Conkling. The Senator from New York can, however, bide his time.

Bishop Mrak, of Marquette, whose resignation was accepted in Rome, will be consecrated by Rev. Edward Jacker, late of Point St. Ignace, as administrator. Bishop Mrak intends to return to the work with the Indians of this state, among whom he was formerly a Catholic missionary for many years.

The land grant for the Marquette and Mackinaw railroad has been extended, and it is said a strong company has been organized in Detroit to push the enterprise to completion. Francis Palms, H. P. Baldwin, J. J. Bagley, Z. Chandler, Alfred Sheldon, M. S. Smith, C. H. Buhl and other "heavy" men are named in connection with it.

The Republican papers of this State, with scarcely an exception, express a decided preference for Michigan's favorite steed "war horse"—Hon. Zachariah Chandler—for Senator to fill the vacancy occasioned by the retirement of Judge Christiancy. And in doing so, they honestly reflect the sentiment of the rank and file of the Republican party.

There will be a grand dance at W. F. Chaney's Hall, at the Head of South Arm on Friday Eve., Feb. 21, 1879. A very fine time is expected, and a cordial invitation given to all. Music by Professor's White and Richardson. Hill for supper 50cts. Supper can be had if desired.

W. F. EMPY Prop.

Late—In South Arm Township, between the place of Rev. Crose and my place, about October, 1878, one pumpkin sorry note, in favor of myself against Joshua Morgan. All parties are cautioned against purchasing said note will not agree making with me.

GEORGE BURTON

South Arm, Jan 27, 1879

The Democrats get Governorships of this State are terribly tumbled up and down in their minds as to the prospective return of Zeck. Chandler to the United States Senate. They are willing to do almost anything—to take the bitterest kind of physic—to defeat him, which is of itself a very good reason why "Old Zach" should receive the support of every straight out stalwart Republican.

THE INDIAN BUREAU.

The Argument Against the Transfer to the War Department.

The report, embodying the views of Senators Saunders and Oglesby and Representatives Stewart and Van Vorhes, four of the eight members of the Joint Committee on the Indian Transfer Question, has been completed and presented to Congress. The Associated Press gives the following synopsis:

It is shown that various evils and abuses grew up under the administration of Indian affairs by military officers, and notwithstanding the reformatory legislation of March 3, 1867, they continued to grow up to the last hour in which the War Department had control of the Indian population, and so little had been done toward Indian civilization under the War Department's management that public opinion had acquiesced in the assumption that the Indians were not susceptible to civilization. It is estimated that if all the fighting Indians of the country could be got together the would not number more than 19,000, and the loss of their arms concentrating for warlike purposes is simply preposterous, because it is impossible. Indian wars on a large scale are over, and we may reasonably hope that that question of Indian history is in the past.

In reference to the sentiments of the Indians, on the subject, the Secretary of the Interior made to the committee statements giving the views and votes of the various tribes, which gives an average vote of sixteen to one against transfer, nearly all the tribes being unanimously opposed to the proposition. All the religious denominations in this country are absolutely opposed to the proposed change of management. Their opinions and advice deserve and should receive respectful consideration. They have among the 20,000 Indians some zealous tribes in a favorable fact, and on his visit committee nothing in specifically call the attention of Congress. We are of opinion that in such special cases the difficulty should have temporary control, and that the President have power to place such warlike or hostile tribes under military discipline, the same as he would a city or State surrounded by insolent or rebellion. That the Indians can be Anglo-Saxonized in a day, beyond all cavil in the case of the Winnebagoes and Omahas, who voluntarily emigrations in the State of Nebraska. Here the in comfortable houses, have good barns, cultivate their land and raise as good wheat and potatoes as are produced through the labor of any white man. They have churches and schools, and no more orderly community can be found than on these two reservations. They are continuing to become citizens, a question of such vital importance in their case that it must soon be settled. It is necessary to lead these people under military management? We think not. Whether the management of the Indians remains where it is or is relegated to the War Department, a general system of reform and improvement should continue, and among the most important things contributing immediate attention is to provide that the civil law of the United States be extended over all Indians who still agree to their tribes, with a code of laws applicable to them, defining crime and providing a judicial tribunal, generally to what is known as the Indian Territory.

In the opinion of the committee, such legislation is imperatively needed, and no time ought to be lost in making the necessary provisions therefor. The Indian Agent ought to be the supreme point to which all those opposed to the present policy of the government gave its scorn and derision. They assert that the Indian Agent is overpowered with "rum and corruption." The committee made diligent inquiry into the present system of conducting the agencies, and are of opinion that, as a general rule, the Agent is more sinned against that sinning. There are now seventy-four Agents employed, and at every agency visited by the board, the Department promises to reduce this number by the consolidation of agencies and issuance of reservations where it can be done with justice to the tribes. Men of integrity, who are competent to administer the affairs of an Indian agency successfully, can in most cases, get larger salaries at less sacrifice nearer their homes. The salary should be large enough to enable honorable men of cultivated executive ability, and to enable them to take their families with them to the agencies, and to support them there. The pay ought to be more liberal, and the tenure of office should be secure for four years, provided the Agent should prove worthy.

The laws providing for the punishment of wrongdoers in this branch of service ought to be severely severe. The guilty should be punished with an unmistakable earnestness that will convince all others of the firm purpose of the government. We are assured that this policy has been inaugurated, and that already the good results are felt. As the Commissioner of Indian Affairs testifies that there has not been a shade of vacation under the present Administration.

The committee say they cannot find any good ground for the common statement that the War Department is any more economical and efficient than the Interior Department in the purchase of supplies and the transportation of them. It is found that both Departments have excellent systems, and that both have made great improvements of late years. The improvement in the management of the Indian Bureau is said to be especially marked. Its system of business is pronounced very effective, and the organization of the office is considered complete enough to be a barrier all outside irregularities.

Your committee are of opinion that the reservations should be increased, and that, as rapidly as possible, small tribes or parts of tribes be placed on large reservations, unless they can be located in severalty, so as to avoid tribal relations, and prepare for citizenship. We are of opinion that the Indian Bureau should be a distinct department, with the Chief a member of the President's Cabinet. This will add much in the solution of future complications in Indian affairs. The Indian should be protected in his rights to his land, and a safeguard ought to be thrown around him, so as to prevent designing persons from stirring up homestead, or induce him to sell at for a trifling compensation. He should not have the right to sell his land, without the consent of the Department, under twenty-one years.

Your committee, therefore, are of the good reason why the proposed change should be made. They believe that harm, rather than good, to the red men would result from the change, and that no possible advantage could result to the Government from it.

Your committee are, therefore, of opinion that it is not expedient to transfer the Indian Bureau to the War Department.

The report is accompanied by a bill authorizing the President to "transfer the custody, control and management of any Indian tribes from the Interior to the War Department temporarily, whenever, in his judgment, he shall deem it advisable to do so, either on account of actual or apprehended hostilities of Indians against the United States, or in case of difficulties between such Indians and settlers." The bill further proposes to authorize the President to detail any officers of the Army to act as Indian Agents or Inspectors, or in any other capacity in the Indian Service, and exercising the same powers, and subject to the same rules and regulations as civil officers, and an appropriation of $15,000 is recommended to pay the traveling expenses of officers thus detailed during the next fiscal year.

The "Plain-Spoken" Woman.

Plain-speaking is an excellent thing in woman—when she has the harmless habit of talking to herself. When it becomes general, or rather when it becomes specific, the victim if she be a woman "talks back," and if he be a man takes his hat from the hall table and goes out "to list to Nature's teachings." When a woman speaks plainly to a man he feels for a moment that he is the worst specimen of humanity on this footstool that he has got to begin life all over again; that his monitor is too good to live; and then in the immediately following reaction he considers the plain-spoken woman the worst person that ever lived, and himself the worst-abused saint above ground. When his equanimity is over he accepts the criticism right or wrong and avoids the critic to the end of time.

The plain-spoken woman is always ready to be done by as she does to others, and if she selects her subjects from her own sex she is apt—to paraphrase the words of the elder Weller—to learn a good many things that she did not know before. But the plain-spoken woman is always an egotist and treats the criticisms of her friends—no, she has no friends, her subjects—as mere outbursts of temper and takes them as deserved compliments to her honesty. But she nearly always scores men. They need it. Has she not insight? She knows men. They are self-conceited and need "taking down." They are not honest and need "showing up." Then they do not "talk back." They simply take her medicine and their hats and meditate on the stars.

The plain-spoken woman rides a hobby. It is honesty. Courtesy is but another name for dishonesty. If she is glad to see a caller, she says so. If she is not, she says so. She calls a spade a spade, a lie a lie, and she sees nothing but spades and lies along her pathway. Dissertations truth is her god. Upon its shrine she is ready to sacrifice her friends and all the amenities of society. She does not take hidden and unknown motives into account. Not she. Motives? Fiddlesticks! "Fiddlesticks" is her favorite word. It is her expression of disgust with shams. It speaks volumes, that word. It is the summing up of human dishonesty. Why, it is not apparent to the average mind. But it is the name of an instrument that is used to scratch lies out of another instrument. For music and poetry are both lies. Anything pleasant is a lie. "If it be pleasant it must be false." That is her theory. "Talk we about sweet faces? Faces moves the world, does it? Fiddlesticks! Taet is dishonesty. Tact is a subterfuge." So she runs on, forgetful that there is an honesty without discourtesy, a truthfulness without incivility.

But there is a woman of quite a different character in many of our homes, one who sometimes speaks plainly, too, to a mother or a wife, who having our welfare at heart, reproves with tenderness and lovingly leads the way to better things. To such is given our heart's homage and in it she reigns forever, because she "chides our wanderings but relieves our pain."—Alliance.

The Black Plague.

The terror which the appearance of the Black Plague has caused in Europe might seem to be excessive, were it not that history records many instances of dreadful ravages wrought by a disease similar to this one. The plague in London, in 1665, carried off about 70,000 souls in less than six months; and, though English readers are most familiar with this event, it is not a solitary case. In the same year with the London plague, 40,000 died in Neapolitan Territory. In the fourteenth century, during the reign of Edward III., there was a plague much more general and destructive than the one of 1665. This plague was supposed to have had its origin in the Far Cathay in 1333, though that region was then so remote that little could have been known about it. But at least it was certain that the plague came by way of Constantinople, Florence, Vienna and Paris to London. It was estimated that 60,000 died in Florence alone, 100,000 in Venice, 50,000 in Paris, 60,000 in Avignon and 100,000 in London. The plague was known still further back. The beginnings of authentic history contain reference to it. One thousand years before Christ 70,000 persons died of it in a single year in Palestine. Rome lost half its population by the plague in 542 B. C., and 10,000 a hundred years later. It is said that the plague spread over the whole known world in the third century, and in the eleventh century one-half the known population was swept away by it. Throughout the Black Plague should once be introduced into this country, it might make ravages in comparison with which our previous experience of yellow fever, cholera, and small-pox would be insignificant; and there would be less excuse for its passage through quarantine since we now for be known, but never appeared here, and is not natural to our soil or climate.—Chicago Tribune.

The Chamber of the Silent Valaries of Chess.

"They come here regularly each day," mostly gray heads, as you perceive, as I sit, bending over the little tables, as intent upon the figures which they move as though they were commanding small armies, and were silently maneuvering to secure a strategic point that leads to victory."

By mounting two flights of stairs the Record reporter and his informant found themselves in a spacious room beneath the arched roof of the Mercantile Library.

The light streamed in from two broad casements in the roof, and fell upon the chess-players. Most of them were men of years, and all were silently studying the problems which every move gave birth to.

"Don't they ever speak or get excited and jump the tables, or quarrel over the game?" asked the reporter.

"No, sir," was the emphatic reply of the veteran. "The old players seldom speak. Occasionally an old chap, with an adversary worthy of his steel, gets excited and cries 'check' when he makes a point; but nine times out of ten he simply smiles at the perplexity of his opponent, and resumes his plotting for a second. The young fellows," continued the knowing one, "sometimes forget themselves and squabble; but when they find the eyes of the old stagers fixed on them in amazement, they crawl into themselves, as it were, and remember that chess is a science, and not a game to fight over."

"Check!" quietly broke in a bald-headed player, beaming blandly at his opponent, who was beating a tattoo with his fingers on his leg in a wild effort to extricate himself from a bad position.

An old grizzly fellow, with a face lined with thought, sitting at an adjoining table, shook his snowy head at the exclamation, and glared at the jubilant man who spoke, as though he had committed an unpardonable breach of manners; then relapsed into himself again, and resumed his deep study of the board at which he sat.

Two players about whose table stood a number of mute and interested spectators signified by their looks, and not by words, that a mistake had occurred. No one endeavored to make an explanation.

"The wrong pawn was moved," said one of the principals.

His opponent reached out his arm, and with one sweep of the hand brushed the men from the board.

A boardless youth in one corner of the room indecorously thumped a knight on his board and cried "check!" Every eye was fixed upon him with a withering sarcasm that made him shrink about half his natural size, and then an awful stillness fell upon the room, and the players resumed their thinking.

"Once upon a time," said the Record's chaperon, "an American chess-player was desirous of becoming acquainted with a famous French player, and, to accomplish his desires, haunted the club-rooms of Paris, and lived in the chess-parlors, in the hope that some one would fulfill his desires, and open a way for him to sit across a table with the Frenchman as an opponent. After months of fruitless endeavor, the American found himself one day in a select club-room, behind the chair of a friend, who was playing a most excellent game with the French expert. While the game was in progress his friend received a message that necessitated his immediate departure, and, turning to the American chess-player, invited him to finish the game. The Frenchman never removed his eyes from the table, and, therefore, did not notice the pleased expression that diffused itself over the American's face. The game progressed in silence. The American made a master move. In his delight he called 'check.' The Frenchman raised his eyebrows and shoulders simultaneously, and, in a voice not to be mistaken, exclaimed: 'I do not play with chatter-boxes,' and swept the chessmen from the table and sailed out of the door."

"Check!" said a smothered voice, in the dusky quiet of the room. The old players straightened their bent forms, cast dagger-looks at the meek old man, and immediately fell again and silence reigned supreme.

"You see," said the knowing one, "a fellow will give way to his feelings occasionally, but it won't do to give way too often. That's the second time the fellow said 'check' this afternoon, and I'm in favor of ruling him out."

"Check," cried the opponent of the man with a smothered voice, as he vigorously pushed a pawn in its place: "check, be gracious."

This was too much.

"Gentlemen!" said a burly man, in black; "gentlemen—"

"Shish," hissed a dozen tongues, and the players crawled within themselves, and again silence was supreme.—Philadelphian Record.

Hungarians and Roumanians.

The Hungarians, as all who have traveled on the Danube know, are dandies in their own fashion. They delight in clean shirts, richly embroidered in red and black, in cotton drawers or trowsers, edged with lace or crochet-work, such as our English ladies affect upon their chemises, and in magnificent Hessian boots, which are brushed to brightness at least once a week. The male Roumanian, on the other hand, is dirty and careless in his attire. A filthy sheepskin jacket, swarming with fleas, is his chief garment; short trowsers, of leather or the coarsest cloth, and the everlasting conical wooden cap, together with some minor articles, among which the pistol or knife stuck in the waistbelt must not be forgotten, completing his attire. But when we turn from the men to the women, we find that the comparison is reversed. Nothing can well be more wretched than the dress of the Hungarian women on the banks of the Lower Danube. At Mohacs, for example, one saw them marching down to the river to get water, clad in a pair of their husband's enormous boots, a short petticoat, scarcely reaching to the knees, and a sheepskin jacket that also was the property of their better half. Again, at the frontier station, just before entering Roumania, my sensibilities were somewhat shocked at seeing a girl of seventeen busily engaged in sweeping the veranda, and in nothing but a linen undergarment, of very moderate dimensions, and this in spite of the fact that at least a dozen soldiers were lounging about close to her. In Hungary, in short, while the man is well dressed, his wife or daughter is dressed like a savage. In Roumania, on the other hand, the dress of the women is decidedly better than that of the men, and offers a most favorable contrast to that worn by their Hungarian sisters. In fact, after crossing the frontier, I saw no dresses which were not at least decent and sufficient, according to the Western standard, which is more than can be said of my experience in some parts of Hungary.—Fortnightly Review.

Education does not consist in mastering languages, but in the moral training which education extends beyond the school-room to the play-ground and which teaches that a manner dignity can be done than to fail in a recitation."

Train the Boys for Business.

There is one element in the home instruction of boys to which, so far as our paper, too little attention has been given, and that is the cultivation of habits of punctuality, system, order and responsibility. In too many houses holds boys from twelve to seventeen years are too much administered to by fond mothers or other female members of the family. Boys' lives during those years are the halcyon days of their existence. Up in the morning just in season for breakfast; nothing to do but to start off early enough not to be late; looking upon an errand as taking so much time and memory away from enjoyment; little thought of personal appearances except when reminded by mothers to "spruce up" a little; finding his wardrobe always where mother puts it—in fact, having nothing to do but enjoy himself.

Thus his life goes on until school ends. Then he is ready for business. He goes into an office where everything is system, order, precision. He is expected to keep things neat and orderly, sometimes kindle fires, file letters, do errands—in short, become a part of a nicely-regulated machine, where everything moves in systematic grooves, and each one is responsible for correctness in his department, and where the place of ministers to his comfort, he finds task-masters, more or less lenient, to be sure, and everything in marked contrast to his previous life.

In many instances the change is too great. Errors become numerous; blunders, overlooked at first, got to be a matter of serious moment; then passion is overtasked, and the boy is told his services are no longer wanted. This is his first blow, and sometimes he never rallies from it. Then comes the surprise to the parents who too often never know the real cause, nor where they have failed in the training of their children.

What is wanted is for every boy to have something special to do; to have some duty at a definite hour, and to learn to watch for that time to come; to be answerable for a certain portion of the routine of the household; to be trained to anticipate the time when he may enter the ranks of business, and be fortified with habits of energy, accuracy, and application, often of more importance than superficial book learning.—Scientific American.

Treatment of Balky Horses.

The bad habit of balking of horses generally arises from an obstinate mind, or, in other words, selfishness, refusing to go or exercised over their position, and resolute to their own way. This is one form of baikiness. The second is the one which refuses to pull from pure laziness, or stops when tired, and refuses to go any further. The third embraces such horses as are timorous, combined with a stubborn disposition, and which frequently refuse to pull from fear as well as stubbornness or want of courage.

These are the different forms of balkiness of horses. But not always is the animal so by nature, but frequently becomes so by ill-training and bad driving. Horses may be made balky very easily, if too many words are spoken to them at one time; such as "Get up, there," "Whoa, back," and so forth, until the animal gets excited and finally loses command. There are many different ways for treating balky horses; but one thing must be borne in mind—to speak kindly to them, and show him that he is in the control and power of man, and has to obey; but do not abuse him. Now, when you undertake to break a balky horse—one that is sufficiently gentle to know what is wanted of him—put on a bridle-bit and line him up to anything you desire, and give him the commanding word to go ahead. If he goes, you have nothing to do or say, but let him go ahead and do the desired work; but if he refuses to go any further, unhitch him immediately, take all the harness off except the bridle, take a rope the size of a wash-line and fasten it to the bit on the right hand side and pull it through the ring of the left under the chop; pull his head round to his left side and slip the rope under his tail like a crupper and fasten it, keeping his head rather close to his side. Now all is ready, so let him go; he will of course travel like a dog after his tail, for he can travel no other way. Take a long whip and make him go if he refuses, but speak kindly to him all the time. Never lose your temper, but govern it. The horse will travel round in a circle until he gets into a sweat and becomes languid and finally falls down; now immediately loosen the rope and let him up; talk kindly to him now and caress him.

Now remember the work is only half done. Reverse the position of the line the same as before, and start him off again, and let him go till he falls down the second time; loosen the line immediately and let him get up; now hitch him up, and my word for it he will pull as he never pulled before. He now is convinced that he is entirely in the control and power of man, and has to obey; his stubborn spirit is converted into a spirit of submission, and he is cleared the space, taking the sleigh with him, and soon after coming to another spot where four planks had been blown out, the horse actually jumped over that opening also, taking with him in safety the sleigh and driver, so that the doctor now claims that he has one of the best jumping horses in the country. It certainly was a very dangerous way of crossing the bridge, for the distance to the creek is far enough to break the neck of any horse should it fall through, and a man would quite likely be treated in the same manner; though the doctor is willing to stake his reputation that the horse knew he could go over the place in safety, or he wouldn't have tried it.—Kingston (N. Y.) Freeman.

Beauty and the Birds.

The London fashion journals announce that in Paris, as well as in London, "fashion now draws largely on natural history for her ornaments. A few years ago it was considered doubtful taste to wear a small reptilian or an artificial flower, but such scruples have vanished, and lizards and flies of all descriptions are seen on bonnets and hats; even miniature squirrels and mice are in preparation for ornamenting various accessories of the toilet, and large birds serve as motifs for the decoration of evening dresses. The peacock dress is one of those novelties; the material is white satin, and the panier is made of a large bird, with the handsomest bird in creation; the front is ornamented at regular intervals with plaits alternating with rows of fringe, and the low-pointed bodice is made with embroidered bretelles; the head-dress is a diamond peacock, with outspread tail sparkling with emeralds and rubies. The swan dress is another novelty made of white satin, and made with panniers embroidered with white chenille, and lavishly trimmed with white lace. This toilet was dispatched by Mme. Dubovy for the Copenhagen fêtes. The same dress maker has likewise introduced the butterfly dress in the palest blue Levantine silk with the under of gold silk, and the paniers embroidered with multicolored jet, the design of butterflies being carried out in the most delicate manner, with the smallest beads. If well carried out there is marked originality about such dresses."

All this is very well; but there is another not so pleasing side to the picture, as appears from the following letter published in the London World:

"I can hardly believe it! But I have before me a letter, written by a gentleman of good faith and position, to a local paper in the Western country, crying shame on a lady who appeared on the 30th of December last at a fancy ball attired as 'winter'; the emblem of winter being robin skins sewn on to a white dress garnished with fur and holly. Is it possible we have such senseless cruelty or such a want of taste? It is lucky for that lady that she did not attend a juvenile ball in such a costume. Assuming it to be true, the pets of bur children and homes must have been decoyed and brutally butchered to make a coquette's holiday. I suppose the next thing will be an arrangement of kingfishers for Miss Arrye, and sweet cockatoos' skins 'can fire a goun' will be prowling about our rivers' pits and islands. May Birapirie be there! Everybody has seen the frequent appeals of 'The Baroness' for hospitality to our young feathered friends. And yet the incident I quote took place not 20,000 miles away from Her Ladyship's favorite seaside resort! Down with these, what Bentham called, Philhisozoics!"

FEATHERS have entirely replaces flower trimmings.

A MERCHANT down town sells more of Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup than all other medicines together. It surely must be the best remedy for a cough.

A NUMBER of farms around the Vershire, Vt., copper mines have been made valueless by the sulphurous smoke from the furnaces used for smelting ore, and some time ago the Vermont Mining Company was sued for $500,000 damages by property-owners in the vicinity, but the Court decided for the company.

Benefactors.

When a board of eminent physicians and chemists announced the discovery that, by combining some well-known valuable remedies, the most wonderful medicine was produced, which would cure such a wide range of diseases that most all other remedies could be dispensed with, many were sceptical; but proof of its merits by actual trial has dispelled all doubt, and to-day the discoverers of that great medicine, Hop Bitters, are honored and blessed by all as benefactors.

A Sick Senator.

The excessive corpulency of a certain United States Senator has long been the butt of editorial wit and spicy paragraphs in the pens of Washington correspondents. Few persons have suspected that his obesity was a disease, and liable to prove fatal. Yet this is the sad fact. Excessive fatness is not only a disease in itself, but one liable to generate other and more serious ones. Chemistry has at last revealed a safe, sure, and reliable remedy for this abnormal condition of the system in Allan's Anti-Fat. Distinguished chemists have pronounced it not only harmless, but very beneficial to the system, while removing the diseased condition. Sold by druggists.

THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, FEB. 18, - - - 1879.

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR PARIS LETTER.

New York, Feb. 7, 1879.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

Every now and then, through jangling with the administration or running afoul of some pet theories of the importers, the New York Custom House is asked to stand up and turn its pockets inside out, like a schoolboy with suspected contraband articles. Knowing winks have darkened one eye of many a jealous politician as he laid down the law in the palm of his hand, and drew pictures of rotteness and corruption supposed to be underlying the placid surface of the life inside the huge stone building on Wall street.

Whatever the past may have discovered, the confirmation of General Merritt must be accepted in a great measure as a public endorsement of his course, and in recognition of the purpose he has steadily advanced of making the Custom House here a business establishment from top to bottom. And from the political interest evolved from the battles fought on this field, a glance at the magnitude of the business carried on at this threshold of the port of New York has been had through the overhanging smoke of the "big guns" of investigating committees. The Custom House here is the source of about one hundred millions of dollars to the Government annually. It employs nearly a thousand men, and the practical working of its human machinery involves so many details of interest, that I shall endeavor a on to devote a letter to the subject. To collect this revenue of one hundred millions costs about two and a half millions, leaving a margin which the supporters of protection love to contemplate.

Out of the slush and mud of the February thaw are greatful New Workers taken by the elevated railroads, but when, as was the case on the Ninth avenue line yesterday, an accident detains hungry residents from getting up town, even a bob-tail surface car becomes a wheeled paradise. The detention referred to occurred at a point on the road where, as train after train came up and was blocked, the passengers were unable to leave the cars. Fair weather christians made the air blue with choice selections from their reserves, and as the line of cars gradually stretched along five blocks, the gamins were joined by homeward bound pedestrians on the street below and booted dersive orders for sandwiches and breakfast for the hungry crowd on high. Workmen worked in vain, and when the delay took to itself a chronic appearance, a bold few let themselves down from the cars to the track, and over the edge down the iron cross-pieces supporting the structure to the ground. Soon there was an avalanche of two bundles falling into the street, followed by half famished owners. When the cars were finally moved to the stations, the passengers who were too timid to attempt the descent to the street, kept up the appearance of pluck by thrashing the gatekeepers in the vicinity of the cars when tickets were demanded. And now at least three hundred New Yorkers are ashamed to look any well regulated horse-car in the face. It is stated on good authority, that the chuckling of the car horses during the elevated blockade could be heard twenty blocks against the wind.

Thos. Nast, the genial, handsome and richly little man who sustains the popularity of Harper's Weekly, and whose odd autograph has become as familiar to the world as that of Saturday Night Hancock or ex-treasurer Spinner, was this week made the recipient of a grace and well-merited token of esteem in the shape of a handsome silver vase, presented to him by a committee of the doners, who are some 3,500 officers and enlisted men of the army and navy of the United States. The vase itself, which is sixteen inches high, shaped like a soldier's canteen, and supported by two eagles of exquisite workmanship, is a rich and valuable present, and the circumstances of its presentation and the speeches with which it was accompanied, render it ten-fold more highly to be prized. Mr. Nast has already been a stanch friend of the army and navy, as well as of the general principles of honesty, justice and common sense, and this merited testimonial might with propriety be regarded as coming from the whole nation.

Circumstances of the last two months, which I referred in a late letter, having brought the whole subject of the theory and methods of life insurance again uppermost in the press and in the public mind, the statements of the various companies which January, as usual, brings forth, are once more objects of interested study and comparison. On the whole they show that the leading companies have held their own very encouragingly, and a few of them have even made considerable additions to their surplus. In one case, that of the Ætna of Hartford, this increase amounts to almost a million of dollars net for the year. Of course this is exceptional, but it shows what honesty and persistent conservatism of management will do in even the most unpropitious times. This principle of conservatism, the only true one to govern the management of trust funds, is in the Ætna so far removed from "old fogyism" as it is from imprudence, and has given that company a position which it would be faint praise to call enviable.

In spite of a good many recent losses, fire insurance, too, seems to be in a good condition. A report just published of the present value of shares in city companies, shows that out of fifty-seven companies reported, the stock of only ten is quoted below par, while shares in some of the remaining forty seven is purchasable only at an advance of 800 to 1,000 per cent. upon their face value.

Although there are still in progress quite a number of matches and walking manis which has raged so furiously here this winter seems to be on the wane. Madame Anderson's successful performance was the climax. Since then another young woman entered for another and still more protracted jaunt, which was liberally advertised by full length colored posters and the like, in the expectation of making piles of money for her backers, but she broke down in a few days and the affair fizzled out. Amusement hunters and sporting men have thus been forced to seek other excitement and have found it in the great billiard tournament at the Cooper Union, and in the noble amusement of cock fighting, which is now assiduously pursued wherever the police can be evaded. A more peaceful interest in birds is developed at the Aquarium, where a really fine pigeon show is now in progress. The number and variety of these beautiful fowls displayed is as surprising as it is pleasing. On the last three afternoons of the week crowds were attracted to witness the flight of large flocks of trained carrier pigeons, which were liberated and dispersed to different destinations.

The hugh and cry about sugar adulteration, the curious and rather disgraceful rise and progress of which I have previously chronicled, has finally died away into silence. It was expensively started and expensively sustained for a little while, but lacking the necessary foundation of truth, it could not prevail. The Board of Health has just sent a communication to the Chamber of Commerce, in which it curtly snubs the would-be alarmists, and dismisses the subject in these words: "In the opinion of the Board, there is not at present sufficient cause to justify apprehensions on the part of the public of ill effects from the use of refined sugars, and it does not appear to be necessary to discriminate between raw and refined sugars, for both are wholesome articles of food." RADIX.

Senator Howe, after 18 years service in the Senate, will leave it, next month, without a dollar in the world.

Grevy's salary as President of the French Republic is $100,000 a year, with $50,000 for household expenses.

Rochefort, the Brick Pomeroy of the French press, calls Gambetta a harlequin, buffoon, traitor, fatted satrap, and a vain cross-breed.

The equestrian statue of Victor Emanuel will stand on a triumphal arch, cost $2,000,000, and the whole world may compete for its construction.

A Cleveland paper says "Senator Blaine generally wears a rusty black hat, which he is constantly smoothing the wrong way." The same way, it will be noticed, that he is constantly smoothing the administration.

Democracy and Tyranny.

Written for the Sentinel.

If Northern Democrats, within themselves, would be governed by reason, and not surrender their judgment and understanding to the double tyranny of authority from the South, and blind party fealty within, they would soon discern how fatal to the rights of citizenship are the favors, vindication and support which they extend to Democratic tyranny of the South. But Northern Democracy being the natural slaves to the old masters of the late oligarchy, no wonder that they strive so much to have the Republic conformably governed to the external and internal vicious rule by which they are governed themselves. Northern Democracy is indeed to be pitied; for it stands in the presence of its Southern prince and lawgiver, dumb as an ass at a public axle, and not one of its so-called leaders dare denounce Carolina's last insult to the Federal flag, or pronounce the panegyric so richly deserved by those who have been slain for the only reason that they loved the Union, the Republic, and the laws! Indeed, the Democratic party love neither true liberty nor freedom under law, but the bloody license which never had greater scope or more indulgence than under the present reign of Democratic tyranny of the South. Southern rulers of "National Democracy" permit their Northern servile assistants to select one from their filthy ranks for President, who excels all others in eating Southern dirt, as well as for his sublime emotional sympathy for the "lost cause" of the "patriotic heroes" of the late rebellion, and for the full and complete indemnity of Southern losses during the late civil war, he is to stand unalterably fixed and pledged. Nothing so terrifies and offends the red-shirted brigands of Democracy as to hear honorable mention of the name of that pre-eminent hero who routed and quelled the chivalry of the South, with all their boasted claims to hereditary State prerogatives, and established the hereditary rights of our great Republic—the Union of the States.

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, if you will only throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. Cheuvan, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

THE BOY WHO SAILED.

There was a youth named Peter Sanne—
He ain't dead I don't remember,
But he was nuisish in his mind,
And sigh as December.

He didn't like to pick up chips
And didn't like to hoe;
You never caught him chopping wood
When he could swimming go.

His father took him by the ear,
And led him to a grove,
And wanted him to take that weigh.
But Peter's name was Jno. 80?

His little sister with blonde hair,
Asked him to be a pard
But Peter pouted at poets all
And said he couldn't go.

"I'll be a raging sailor boy!
I'll cleave the Spanish main!
I'll see the coast of Africa,
Or I come Louis again."

So Peter said and so he meant,
And it was no cheating,
To talk of spars and jibs and stays,
And learn the ropes by heart.

One night we packed his little duds,
And softly set his mother,
And watched him as he went down
From theme street to corner.

He found a berth aboard a ship,
And soon he sailed away
The ship was bound across the sea
To Port au Prince.

When fairly out upon the wave,
To Peter the Captain said;
"Now you are going to be a sailor,
Or blood will here be shed."

The boy stood on the burning deck—
That's modern so and for he
He beat a pound of flesh per day,
And nothing grew of same.

Then send he got from morn till night,
His back with pain did bend;
He thought the cook would never come,
Though he got lots of end.

When he fell sick they made him broth,
Of vegetables and niche
When he got well they fed him on Potatoes and ragouche.

Imp," "monkey," "scalawag" and "thief,"
Were names to him applied;
That if he didn't look lively well,
A rope his back would ride.

Thus things went on for weeks or more,
And Peter's heart grew sore,
He thought he'd run and get a grave
Beneath the ocean's roar.

He called for me, but I was in vain—
He was alone for days
In his berth he lay.

He asked for "father" as he died,
He cried for mother dear,
He wept and tears until his cheeks
Were buried in his tear.

He died, the body was enwrapped
In cottonades and sail,
And sent sailor-like to sea
To see the lucky go.

COME WHEN YOU'RE CALLED.

Clara Bassett to Ruth.

WOODLAND, Sept. 18, 18—.

Dear, darling mummy, I got your nice letter this morning, and I thank you for you scold. It is my fault, my very great fault—no, it isn't, either; I cannot tell a lie, my dear mother. I am a little hatchet like it. W. It is not my fault, really. I have been so busy and so tired that I could not find a minute to write to you. Now don't make up a sweet, sober face at me because I say I am cross, it's very good of me to own it, though you could not decide have found it out in the course of this epistle, so it is a sort of cheap virtue to tell you of it.

Well, to begin at the beginning, when we first went to housekeeping I united a whim to see how like wives in town before I had any company; and I was so glad I did, for I had such queer things happen, it will be quite as if I should never learn how to have parties at all. Now, mummy, you know my ways, you know, so I thought I would be so nice not to have to get a real, proper lunch, but only some tea, and I had one on the stove for there is only one spare room to this house; so I wrote to her, and said I should like to have her and one of the girls come to see me in June. It is pleasant here then, and I was going to ask Kitty Hayes to stay, because she always goes into the country then. So I wrote just as nice a letter as I could, and made all my plans, and engaged strawberries for every day, and ordered cream, and that so much, for I could take it back, but a letter arrived saying she couldn't come in June, but in July. Only I didn't mind that so much, for I could take it back, but a letter arrived saying she couldn't come in July at all, but in August, and come and have company in June herself, but she would come in July. Oh, dear! I had just that very day written to Ella, and I had to go and write her another letter and tell her all about it, and ask her to come in August. I meant to have come in August, mummy, but you know I had to put her off, for she was going down to New York in June to get her summer things. She likes to wait till then, because they are cheaper, so she couldn't come before August anyway; and then I sat down and wrote to Jack's cousin, Sarah Bassett (he has got three Cousin Sarahs), and asked her to come in June; he liked her, and so much, that on one occasion I heard him call her "a duck," at what I thought was foolish.

She accepted at once, and sent a note to Tilden's house, and he and Felton must be telegraphed to return at once; nearer was arranged to send Felton any money, nor did he like to, so Tilden was also surprised at Felton's dispatch. Mr. Cooper then submitted a statement of the expenditures of the National Democratic Committee, on which he was Treasurer, to the total amount expended was $15,360 from the day of the election up to the present. There was also a special fund necessary expenses incurred. Mr. Cooper further testified that on any occasion Gov. Tilden knew where Pelton was going, he seemed angry and insisted that he should not go. Pelton did go to Baltimore, and on hearing of the dispatch and Pelton's departure Mr. Kerr became extremely impression of Pelton's dispatch was the same as was that it was magnificent, to purchase any Electoral votes; never knew of Tilden making any demand to be supplied with money; never knew of any proposition to buy any members of the Legislature; never knew of any money being used for that purpose; never knew of any money being used in Oregon; never knew of any money being used in Wisconsin; never knew of any money being used in Nevada; never knew of any money being used in Florida; never knew of any money being used in South Carolina; never knew of any money being used in Louisiana

BEAVER ISLAND.

A Chapter of News and Gossip From Our Island Neighbors.

Beaver Harbor, Jan. 25, 1879.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

No news from outside since mail for nine weeks. A mail left here on the 27th of December for Mackinac, and arrived there the same evening. The mail carriers waited until 11 o'clock 28th for fear wind, when they started for home, but the wind loading ahead they landed on an ice bank near Watson's Gulliance light house, and passed the night there. The next morning, wind still ahead and ice making fast, they started back for St. Helena, where they stayed until January 5th, when they started on the ice with a dog sleigh, leaving their boat. They crossed over to Gronip and started for Poletz, on the north shore, which point they reached. They remained at Poletz until January 11, when they started on the ice to cross to this place. Meeting a large crack in the ice, they cut off a large cake and paddled themselves across the opening. After a few miles travel their dog sleigh broke down, and they were compelled to carry the mail bag, weighing nearly 100 pounds, on their shoulders, together with their blankets and provisions. On the evening of the 14th, when near Hat Island, they saw open water ahead. They camped there that night, and on the morning of the 15th, they piled their bundle and the mail bag on the top of one of the numerous hills of ice, and taking a bag containing provisions and an axe, they started to find some way out. When about a mile away from the mail-bag, the wind blowing fresh, the ice parted and several large fields of ice commenced moving. They were on a field about a mile wide and as far as the eye could reach in length. The mail bag and bundle being on another field, they could see them on the ice-hill in the distance, looking like a couple of men. They were afloat on Lake Michigan, on a field of ice! With ice and snow they built a house in which they spent the night. They drifted day after day, first up, then down the lake, at one time being close to Point Patterson, on the North Shore, then passing south, near Rabbit Island, then east to the northward of Garden Island, passing Hat Island, then back again, and finally striking against the shore ice near Hat and Hog Islands on the evening of Jan 25th. They made a jump and soon reached Hog Island, where they camped for the night. The next forenoon they crossed over on the ice to Garden Island, where they rested three days with friends, arriving here on the evening of the 29th, having spent eleven days and ten nights on the ice, sleeping in ice and snow huts, but having no blankets, although they were well clothed for a trip of that kind. The men, Joseph Smith and Paul LeBlanc, are old citizens, and are known as honest, truthful men.

The mail contractor and our postmaster are getting a boat built, in which Messrs. Miller, Bedford and LeBlanc will start in a day or two in search of the missing boat, and, if possible, bring another mail also. Their boat will be constructed of half inch lumber, with a train de glisse attached to it, so that it can be used as a sledge on ice as well. It will be large enough to carry five men, and will weigh less than 100 pounds. It would pay the English government to get some of our paper fenced ice-travelers to find the remains of Sir John Franklin.

On New Year's day, three Indians who were cutting wood near Davis Harbor, High Island, crossed over to place to spend the day, one of them, named Pebs, bringing his squaw with him. Obtaining a supply of whiskey at the only saloon kept here, they indulged freely and started for the west side of the Island. The next morning the men returned and reported the squaw dead. They said she was drunk and got chilled. There are stories of foul play, but whiskey was unanimously at the bottom of it.

On January 16th, an Indian named Mitchell Ken-wa-ben-ke-sar came over from Garden Island on the ice, and obtaining a supply of the vile stuff that they sell here and call whiskey, he started for home about seven o'clock in the evening, in company with another Indian named Smith. Having a pint of whiskey left, each one took a half pint at one drink, and, breaking the bottle, started on a run, drawing a hand sleigh, each one whooping and yelling as they ran over the ice. They came to a crack in the ice that had opened since they came over, and both got into the water. Smith crawled out, and threw one end of a string to Mitchell, who grasped it, but the string breaking, he sank to rise no more, a victim of the Demon Alcohol and numerous others dried. It is currently reported that they make a mint pay in advance before drinking Beaver Island whiskey, as the landlord is afraid his victims will not live long enough after drinking his vile compound to get their hands in their pockets. One who knows says aequa fortis is far safer to take.

Dropping in while the Board of Supervisors were in session last Monday, I could not help smiling. Just imagine the Board of Supervisors of Manitou county, composed of three men, sitting around a table in a shoe shop, the Board in session, and Supervisors with their hats on, the Chairman smoking a short clay pipe, the noisy talk of a crowd of outsiders, and all trying to talk at once. Finally the chairman says: "I have a proposition to make for a county highway on Beaver Island." "I second the proposition," says his coadjutor. They vote—two Ayes and one No—and the chairman declared the vote carried. Persons to the vote the County Treasurer asked a hearing and explained in an able manner to the Board the different points of law bearing on the case, and showed the illegality of such a proceeding. But the Chairman remarked, "Legal or not legal, the proposition shall pass. I will pass the proposition if I go to State prison two months." The "proposition" referred to is to tax the county for a public highway through two towns in which these worthies live. During the remarks of the County Treasurer he was called a puppy, and other names by the Hon. Chairman of the "Board."

In the evening one of the Justices of the Peace who was favorable to the above "proposition" smoke his cane over the Treasurer's head, and threatened him with dire vengeance. Our Board consists of three members, one of whom would do things to a lawful way, but the other two are a majority and carry any "proposition" they like, without any reference to legality. The "Chairman of the Board" and his partner in the "proposition" business, along with the County Clerk, have issued a large amount in county orders to parties in their towns, who are ostensibly poor, but really are not in want. One is a brother-in-law of the Chairman, who got $20 from the county last winter, and $20 more this winter. He owns a farm and several head of stock. Another, a sister in law of the same Supervisor, got $20, last winter, $20 last winter and $30 more a month or so later. Another got $20 last winter, $20 last winter, $20 last winter, and $30 more a month or so later, making their total in the neighborhood of $100 in less than a year. Still she is a stout, healthy, able-bodied woman, and, it is reported, has a bank account outside. One of our merchants offered her pork and flour for one of her orders and she said she did not need it, but would let him have the order and he could pay her next summer, as she would not need it before that time. The above are only two of numerous cases, and the county is taxed to its utmost, and still in debt. One of our Supervisors says if he held his office in the old country the people would take off their hats to him.

Very truly yours,

X. Y. Z.

The above engraving was sketched by our special artist, on the spot, on the occasion of the recent Odd Fellows' excursion to Spring Lake. It represents a porking resident of that town. Such a physical condition on the part of the hog would have been justifiable after a short contemplation of the effects of the visit of the Charlevoix delegation, and certain ones in the Petoskey crowd whom we might mention, but as they hadn't commenced eating when the sketch was taken, we are inclined to think it is a little overdrawn. But we don't blame a healthy hog for getting his back up at such undue encroachments upon his hereditary prerogatives.

It makes no difference how many physicians, or how much medicine you have tried, it is now an established fact that German Syrup is the only remedy which has given complete satisfaction in severe cases of Lung Diseases. It is true there are yet thousands of persons who are predisposed to Throat and Lung Affections, Consumption, Hemorrhages, Asthma, Severe Colds settled on the Breast, Pneumonia, Whooping Cough, &c., who have no personal knowledge of Boschee's German Syrup. The proposed charter of the Village of Charlevoix from the dark of evening of village officers as the second Monday in April.

It is stated on good authority that Alex Campbell and family will remove back to Charlevoix from Chebogan the coming Spring.

The Saw Yards.—Work in the lumber shipyards is progressing rapidly. See & Aldrich have the deck on the steamer Nellie Booth, and are now at work on the cabin and rail. The schooner Fleetwing has been cut in two and stretched out twelve feet, and Captain Smith and his carpenters are filling in the gap.

Mr. Lincoln's Death.—The partners of the sad death of S. S. Lincoln have been received. He was out on lame his horse—one of the Texan kind, vicious and unmanageable. In some manner the rope became twisted around his arm, and the horse dragged him to death. When found the body was pounded to a jelly. Up to this writing the body has not arrived here.

Lathe.—A letter from Jacksonville, Texas, received just as we go to press, states that the remains of Mr. Lincoln were buried there Sunday, the Methodist Minister officiating at the grave.

The Harbor Springs mill has shipped 1,000,000 as this probably passed the Straits ere this. The mill passing at an early a date will enable the Engineer in charge to accurate letting of the contracts nearly simultaneous with the opening of navigation.

The Enterprise says: "The river contracting from Lake with Lake Michigan is in places literally alive with herring, several hundred of them and having been caught by vessels as persons the past week. They are however very small, being used only as food for poultry."

The postoffice at Charlevoix, for the week ending last Saturday, issued money orders to the amount of $1,011.86, and cashed orders to the amount of nearly $700. As this is a safe way of judging of the business of a place, let us hear from some of your "crack" towns in this region

February 20, 27 persons joined the Methodists Society at Petoskey, and 10 the week previous, while its Sunday school scholars had given their names to be placed in church classes, preparatory to becoming members. Up to that date, about 75 persons had also joined the Presbyterian church. So says the Record

The original name of Lansing was Michigan. The first notice of a change occurs in a letter written by Aspinus Fitch, United States Senator at Washington, to John J. Adam, Auditor General. The letter was dated April 27, 1848, and contained the following words: "The name of your postoffice has been changed by the department to Lansing."

Advices from various quarters in citizens here indicate that Charlevoix will be overrun next summer by people who desire to enjoy our healthful climate and beautiful scenery. Our facilities for entertaining pleasure and health seekers have been enlarged and improved in all the essential features of a summer resort. Our two beautiful and rapid steamers will afford a great source of pleasure as well as of convenience to our guests, and the means of access to this point will be increased and improved.

[Communicated.]

The now feature that the Record has discovered in the SENTINEL will not be continued in Charlevoix. And if the Record man will wait until his time comes we shall spare no efforts to make as good a likeness of him as the one which he recognized so readily. As we commenced with the handsome, his would appear so far there the last that we think we would have all the grace that necessary to do him justice.

NOTICE!

Notice is hereby given that there will be a meeting of the Republican County Committee of Charlevoix County, at the office of E. H. Green, in the village of Charlevoix, on Saturday, March 1, 1879, at one o'clock p. m., for the purpose of electing a delegate to attend the Republican State Convention, to be held at Lansing on March 6, 1879.

E. H. Green, Chairman.

Charlevoix, Feb. 24, 1879.

In summing up the advantages of Northern Michigan the Saginaw Courier says: "The winters in Michigan may be cold and long, but in Kansas or Nebraska the farmer may be obliged to lay in a heavier stock of fodder and firewood; but he has this satisfaction—he can raise the fodder and he has the firewood. And he has this further satisfaction of knowing that, taking year in and year out, gets large money for his labor than those who go further to find work. In the social schools and good society for his family, and a comfortable living. What more can he ask?"

Crone & Dorman.—This firm have commenced preparations already for next season's business. They are completing the two upper stories of their new building in excellent style, and with a view to taking a number of boarders during the summer. The Commercial is ideally desirable, situated as they are, overlooking the village, the great lake and the harbor, and here can be no doubt of their prompt engagement. Messrs Crone & Dorman will also, as soon as spring opens, start their factory in operation, and will deliver their goods fresh from the oven to any part of the village or Resort. Mr. Dorman is a practical baker of long experience and an established reputation. Their new advertisement will appear next week

If the loss of all the Chebogan Tribune is any evidence, the folks up there are as mad as March hares because Congress cut down the appropriation for their harbor to $3,000 this year. Charlevoix gets $9,000! Only a short time ago the Tribune had a good deal to say about the unimportance of Charlevoix harbor, and rebuked our claim for an appropriation. How now? Ten to one the tonnage in clearances from Charlevoix harbor for the season of 1879 will exceed that of Chebogan for the same period. Come now!

THE LEWIS HOUSE.—Mr. F. J. Lewis writes the Traverse City Eagle that he is making preparations to enlarge the Lewis House to three times its present size. The main building will be 35x92 feet, three stories high, with a Mansard roof and dormer windows. There is also to be two additions, one on the north and the other on the south end of the building, each 28x30 feet and two stories high. There will be two parlors on the lower floor, one 17x46 feet, the other 20x28 feet. The main hall will be 10x35, the dining room 25x30 feet. The house will be furnished with a baggage elevator 12x12, which will rise above the main building ten feet, and be covered with a Mansard roof. These additions will give large and commodious rooms for the accomodation of one hundred guests. And Frank says that, judging from the past experience and present indications, he will have none too much room for his guests another season. He seems to think the question is not how shall we get people to come here another season? but how shall we take the best care of them when they do come? And he expresses his determination to do his share towards it.

C. SMITH, Prop.

The Crops.

The following interesting statistics are taken from a recent report by the Commissioner of Agriculture, on the condition of the crops and the past and present yield and prices of grain, etc., in this country:

The crop of corn in 1877 was the largest ever raised in this country up to that date, having been 1,342,000,000 bushels, valued at $780,000,000. The crop of 1878 exceeded it by bushels, but the over production brought the price much lower, and the crop, which was 1,371,000,000 bushels, is only valued at $448,000,000.

The lowest State averages are in Iowa and Nebraska, both of which States increased their products very largely, too great for home consumption, and too remote from leading markets; the price has fallen to about one-half it was in 1876. The States showing the highest average price are the Gulf States, from Georgia to Texas, where the consumption fully equals the crop, and where the prices are less than those of last year. The rice per bushel, returned December, 1878, was 94.0; in 1877, 85.8 cents.

The average priced wheat for the year 1878 was 91.0; for the year 1877, since adjusted to was to Europe, the increased crop was worth $4.00; but for the year 1878, an increase of upwards of 26,000,000 bushels, the price had fallen to 78 cents per bushel on Dec. 1, 1878.

The crop of 1878, which amounts to 420,000,000 bushels, is worth only $320,000,000, while the crop of 1877, which was 360,000,000 bushels, was worth $450,000,000.

In the case of wheat, the price is greatly influenced by the European demand. For the year ending June 30, 1878, it was found that we exported 149,000,000 bushels of wheat (flour included), about 25 per cent. of our whole crop.

From estimates published by the Board of Trade and the Mark Lane Express of England, it is estimated that the supply of England will be short 19,000,000 quarters, equal to 167,000,000 bushels, being that amount to import. Last year the amount imported was 18,000,000 quarters, or 125,000,000 bushels. This supply was mainly drawn from the United States and will be so this year. From estimates in France, published in the Bulletin des Halles, the wheat crop of 1878 is placed at 22,583,000 hectolitres, or 280,000,000 bushels, being 30,000,000 hectolitres, or 50,000,000 bushels less than that of 1877, which was a fair crop.

The amount imported into France in 1877-78 was 22,000,000; the amount needed this year must approximate 30,000,000 bushels. The same bulletin, estimating the sources of supply abroad, says: "The utmost surplus from Russia for export will be 50,000,000 bushels; from Hungary, 17,000,000; and the only other source of importance is Roumania, 8,000,000 bushels."

The following statement of prices in some of the prominent wheat-growing States since 1874 will fairly illustrate the range of prices in those years:

States.	1874.	1875.	1876.	1877.	1878.
Ohio	$1.04	$1.09	$1.14	$1.24	90.8c
Michigan	1.03	1.10	1.13	1.19	91
Indiana	98	97	1.02	1.13	89
Illinois	94	91	1.00	1.08	87
Wisconsin	89	91	1.01	97	79
Minnesota	79	86	92	89	70
Iowa	68	71	86	87	65
Missouri	85	95	99	1.03	82
Kansas	84	87	86	92	69
Nebraska	66	68	75	80	60

From returns made in December, 1878, we find the average price of potatoes to be 58.5 cents per bushel. With a yield almost identical with that of 1876, we have a price much lower per bushel, and a total value of $10,000,000 less than that year. With a crop some 86,000,000 bushels less than last year the total value does not equal that of the excessive yield of 1877. The following is a table of product, price per bushel, and total value for the last four years:

Year.	Product.	Price per bu.	Value.
1875	124,000,000	98.3	$95,000,000
1876	124,000,000	66.8	82,800,000
1877	170,000,000	44.8	76,240,000
1878	124,027,000	58.8	73,000,000

Diamond Stealing.

A few days since a St. Louis reporter spent an entire afternoon in the private office of a well-known Fourth-street diamond-dealer, and listened with rapt attention to reminiscences and traditions of diamond robberies, successful and attempted.

"Beginning here in St. Louis, for instance," said the dealer, "I remember a case that, while not strictly speaking a robbery, had remarkable features. I sold a solitaire ring for five hundred dollars to a lady living in Lucas place. About a year afterward a man walked into my place and throwing down a ring, asked me what it was worth, at once recognized it as the one I had sold, and I questioned the man very closely. He claimed to have come by it honestly. I talked for a long time, and at last told my clerk to get a policeman.

"Before the clerk got out of the store the man let down completely, and told me that he was a plumber; that three months before he had been called to a house in Lucas place to fix a water-pipe which was stopped up. He found the ring in a pipe, said nothing about it, and waited for three months to give the loss time to blow over. Strange that he should come to my place, the only one in the city where the ring would be recognized. He saw that he was found out, made the best of the job, returned the ring, and secured a reward of two hundred dollars."

One day a respectable-looking gentleman with a young lady, to all appearance his wife, came into the diamond-dealer's place and spent several hours looking at diamonds. One cross and earrings, valued at $5,000, secured to strike the young wife's eye. The husband demurred at the price. The wife playfully coaxed him to buy. "Well, well, I will think about it," said he, as they departed without buying.

The next day the woman drove up in a coupe, and said: "My husband desires to see those diamonds again. I think he will buy. He is sick in bed, and will you go to the Southern with me, or send a clerk?"

Warned by a previous bitter experience, involving a loss of $1,000, the dealer did not send a clerk, but went himself. The people had a suite of parlors on the second floor. The young lady was quite engaging. Her husband was asleep. Would the gentleman wait a few moments? He would. The lady was unusually interesting, and, always susceptible to charming women, the time passed agreeably to the diamond-dealer. The young lady got up and entered the inner apartment, but returned immediately with the announcement that her husband was awake. With the sweetest affectation of enthusiasm, she picked up the case containing the jewels, and, with "Let me show them to my husband," disappeared within.

The door seemed accidentally to blow shut. The diamond-merchant jumped up, and as he did so he heard a key turn in the lock. He at once recognized what was up, and sprang to the door opening to the hall. He found it locked. He was a prisoner. The solid door mocked him. He was desperate. In an instant he drew his revolver, placed it to the lock, fired; it was shattered, and the door swung open to his touch. Like a madman he tore along the halls, down the stairs, through the rotunda and servants' to the ladies' entrance, just as a lady in a carriage gave the order, "Relay Depot, East St. Louis."

He leaned into the window of the carriage and said: "Will your husband take the diamonds, madam?"

She gave him one long, searching look, and then quietly said. "The price is too large, and then they are such hard things to keep;" produced the case from the recesses of her muff and handed it to him, saying: "I should have been quicker." Spyer looked at the diamonds, saw that they were all right and bade the young woman good-day. Within the hour she and her confederate had left the hotel.

Since then the dealer has never let a diamond leave his hand for more than two seconds. The idea is just this: Two smart thieves can afford to work a couple of years to make a haul of $10,000. Take, for instance, the traveling diamond-merchants, who carry with them from $20,000 to $60,000 worth of gems. The chances are that no one of them ever leaves New York without he is shadowed by some nimble thief, who lives in the same hotel with him, rides on the same train, sleeps in the same Pullman, rides in the same omnibus from the depot, waiting for a chance to possess himself of the small sachel or case that is the burden of the drummer's life.

New Cotton Dress Goods.

A quaint novelty among cotton goods for spring and summer dresses is called mummy cloth, and resembles in its rough printed surface the mummy cloth upon which tidies and covers are embroidered. The choice designs come in soft faded colors, such as pale blue with olive in stripes, one of which has sprays of flowers upon it. Some have two or three shades of olive foliage forming stripes; others have ivory and moss stripes, or else blue and pink sprays. The merchants test these colors by having them washed—not with great care, but as they say, "washed to fade"—and these washed samples are shown to purchasers to prove that the stylish faded colors are as fadeless as they ever will be. This mummy cloth is a yard wide; fourteen yards are sold for a simple dress.

Coseline is a stiff, half-transparent cotton fabric woven in lengthwise reps or cords that make it very durable. It comes in cool clean patterns of a blue-green or a gray-blue spray on white, or in chintz colors on cream grounds, or in stripes of the favorite serres blue with olive green. The satteens show the new shades in chintz figures and in stripes.

Printed armures are also new cotton goods. The white ground has raised threads like the brilliantines formerly worn, and is strewn with pale-tinted flowers and foliage. The zephyrs are Scotch ginghams made by Glasgow houses in contrasting colors for plaids and stripes, such as pink barred with blue, or blue with green, or red with white and black. The Scotch tartans are also shown in these goods. A great deal of the Russian braid lace is being imported to trim these pretty zephyr ginghams.—Harper's Bazar.

Pay as You Go.

The best of all rules for successful housekeeping and making both ends of the year meet is "pay as you go." Beyond all countries in the world, ours is the one in which the credit system is most used and abused. Peas books are the Lane and pest of domestic economy, a perpetual plague, vexation and swindle. Abused by servants at the store and the house, disputed constantly by housekeepers and dealers, they are temptations to both parties to do wrong. "I never did that;" "We neglected to enter this;" "I forgot to bring the book;" "Never mind, we'll make a note of it;" and so it goes. But the worst of it is that housekeepers are tempted to order what they have not the means to pay for, and when the month or quarter comes for settlement they are straitened. A family can live respectably on a very moderate income, if they always take the cash in hand and buy where they can buy to the best advantage. Then they will be careful first to get what is necessary. Extra comforts will be had as they can afford them. But it is bad policy to buy on credit. No wise dealer sells so cheaply on credit as for cash.

The table is the place for economy. Good wholesome food costs little compared with unwholesome luxuries.

The dress of a family is so much a matter of taste that it need hardly be said it is just as easy to be respectable in clothing that cost little, as in that which is expensive. To dress accordingly to one's means is the only respectable style.

One must have a home, and in every place there are dwellings suited to the ability of the tenant or purchaser. When the rent, the food and the clothing are kept within one's income, the margin for benevolence, for luxury and for pleasure may be measured and used. In these as in other matters, "pay as you go."

Having made no debts to shops or stores, and especially having paid servants, workmen and workwomen promptly their dues, it is well also to turn in the lock. He at once recognized what was up, and sprang to the door opening to the hall. He found it locked. He was a prisoner. The solid door mocked him. He was desperate. In an instant he drew his revolver, placed it to the lock, fired; it was shattered, and the door swung open to his touch. Like a madman he tore along the halls, down the stairs, through the rotunda and servants' to the ladies' entrance, just as a lady in a carriage gave the order, "Relay Depot, East St. Louis."

MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

—One of the most recent hypotheses of the origin of petroleum is that advanced by M. Mendeljeff. Starting with the nebular hypothesis, he regards the interior of the earth as metallic, doubtless composed largely of iron and carbides of iron, through rents made by earthquakes, water gained access to these bodies at a high temperature and under great pressure, and, by their mutual chemical action, metallic oxides and saturated hydrocarbons resulted. It is these latter, according to M. Mendeljeff, which, carried by watery vapor, have spread themselves through the overlying rocks.

—Prof. Lockyer thinks that human life on the planet Mars may be very much like human life on the earth. Although the light cannot be so bright, yet the organs of sight of the inhabitants may be so much more susceptible as to make their vision quite as good as ours. Probably the heat on Mars is less than on the earth, as the polar snows extend further toward the equator; but it is by no means in proportion to the greater power of the solar rays. Several remarkable seas are now discernible in the Southern Hemisphere, where, as in the case of the Southern Hemisphere of the earth, water covers a much larger area than in the Northern Hemisphere. One of the southern seas of Mars is very like the Baltic in outline. Another sea near the equator is one thousand miles in length and almost one-third as broad, as long, straggling body of water, pretty much the shape of the letter S laid on its back, stretching from east to west.

—Mr. E. J. Lowe, the micrometer-in a letter to the London Times, mentions a curious instance of the value of small birds in agriculture. "Thirty-five years ago a countryman left here for Australia, taking with him all our small birds in a cage. On his return after this interval he was greatly disappointed at finding that the birds were all gone. But the prince was very soon changed, for the country was found to be overrun with insects, and the crops were being destroyed by them. Had the birds been left there, they would have increased enormously, and the insects would have been kept in check. Now, the birds have been sent out again, and the country is recovering its former prosperity."

—Prof. Thompson, in some remarks before the Glasgow Geological Society on some peculiarities in the rotation of the earth, expressed some interesting opinions of the circumstances according to which the axis of the earth might become changed through geological influences, and the consequences of any such change. The possibility of such change, Prof. Thompson thought, had been adduced to account for the great differences in climate which could be shown to have existed in different geological periods in the same portion of the earth's surface; and the question arose whether the crust on the earth's axis could account for these changes of climate. In the present condition of the earth, it is admitted that any change in the axis of rotation could not be permanent—though in very early geologic ages, supposing the earth to have been plastic, the yielding of the surface might have made the new axis a principal axis; but certain it is that the earth at present is so rigid that no such change is possible. The professor declares emphatically that changes of climate have not been produced by changes of the earth's axis.

The Manufacture of Sewing and Floss Silk.

Twenty years ago the manufacture of silk goods in the United States was confined to so few firms and limited to such small amounts, that it was hardly to be classed among the industries of the country. Since about 1860 we have been brought into closer commercial relations with China and Japan, and other silk-producing countries of the world, which has given silk manufacture a powerful impetus. American manufacturers discovered that their goods could rival those of European production in quality as well as price, and consumers found in their advantage to patronize the home industry. Statistics could be given which would show the immense increase of American silk stuffs and the corresponding decrease of imported silks, but as the purpose of this article is to describe the process of manufacturing, they must be omitted.

The raw silk is imported in bales, each containing twenty bundles or "hanks." These weigh from five to eight pounds each, and are made up of a number of skeins. They are broken open and the skeins assorted according to the fineness of fiber; this is done entirely by touch and very rapidly. Ordinary grades of silk contain three sizes; the finer qualities only two. The fiber is exceedingly fine, translucent, of a white or yellow color, and very tough.

After the skeins are sorted they are soaked for three hours in a tank of soap and hot water, to remove the natural gum and the adulterating substances which are added to increase the weight. This adulteration is sometimes equal to one-fourth of the entire weight. The silk is dried in a centrifugal drier without rinsing, as it is found that the presence of a small quantity of soap facilitates the handling of the material. It now goes to the reeling machine. Each of these contains thirty spools and reels. The skeins are placed upon the latter and rapidly spooled. Each machine has a single attendant who, after long practice, shows wonderful dexterity in untangling and tying the delicate fiber.

To a casual observer, raw silk appears to be regular and to possess a perfectly smooth surface; this is, however, not the case; it is uneven, and contains many scales and projecting lumps, which must be removed before the silk can be twisted. This important process of cleaning consists simply in running the fiber through a pair of sharp and nicely adjusted semicircular knives. It is now ready to be combined to form the "thread." Three or more fibers, the number varying with the size of thread desired, are reeled together on a spool, which, in another machine, is rapidly revolved as the silk is wound off; this process it loosely together. The operation of combining and twisting is repeated, and the thread is now made, though several processes are still necessary to finish it. The first of these is stretching, an operation which elongates and tightens the twist, at the same time squeezing out the soap which had been left till this stage. The stretching machine consists of a frame of large, smooth rolls, placed over a tank of pure water. The silk is wet, and reeled from one to the other.

It now undergoes the most delicate operation of the entire manufacture—that of dyeing. Those who delight in artistically combining the most delicate shades in the handsome embroideries, little think of the wonderful skill and care which is necessary to produce these tints. Primary colors must be combined, the most delicate shades must be perfectly matched, and the faultless gradations of color, which blend so harmoniously in the same skein, must be most carefully chosen with reference to the general effect. The beautiful aniline colors are largely used, and the skeins of silk, hung upon long, wooden rods, are suspended in the dye-bath. A large amount of the liquid is next extracted in the centrifugal drier, and the remainder in the drying-room. The dye contained in the thirsty skeins it still and harsh, and to restore its natural softness and pliability it must be "wrung." A surely operative flings the skein upon a strong, projecting bar of lignumvitæ, inserts a similar bar, and twists the bundle, leaving it until all perils have been subjected to the strain.

After picking out the loose bits it is wound on large spools, and is now ready for the spooling room. The spool, already labeled by a method which will be described hereafter, is placed on a spindle, the thread wound on a few turns, and it is then set in rapid revolution. As the silk runs on the spool it passes through a guide in the end of a sliding arm, which is moved regularly back and forth by a revolving screw; this screw has the same pitch as the tightly wound thread upon the spool, the allowance being made for the difference in speeds, and the silk is consequently run on with beautiful accuracy and smoothness. When filled the spool is stopped and the thread cut and fastened. The entire operation occupies but a few seconds. The spools are now weighed separately, and also in lots of one dozen, in order to detect any inaccuracy in amount. All that remains is to place them in neat paper boxes, and they are ready for shipping.

The large part of the spools used are labeled by stamping directly on their ends, in one or more colors. This, besides causing a large waste in expense over the paper label, insures the preservation of the label. The spools are fed between a pair of inked metal rolls with reversed dies upon them, which print the design a sixty-fourth of an inch below the surface. When four colors are used a second pair of rolls become necessary.—Scientific American.

A Lawyer's Fee.

A case was recently pending in one of the courts in Chicago against a lawyer by one of his clients, showing that the plaintiff had placed in the hands of the defendant, the said lawyer, for collection, a demand against a third party for $73. The demand was collected by the lawyer on prosecution. When his client called on him for the amount collected, the lawyer answered that there was nothing coming to him; that the amount collected was barely sufficient to cover his fees in the case. The client thereupon sued the lawyer for the amount, $73. At the trial the latter interposed a set-off of $73.25. Among the items were four "consultations," $20; tying the case, $15; looking up some records, $20; a commission on the amount collected, $17.75; transcript, 50 cents. This made a total of $73.25, or seventy-five cents more than the amount of the original debt. The Court allowed the attorney $15 for collecting the sum. The attorney, it appears, is a young man, and states that the bill on the advice of older practitioners; to whom he probably did not correctly state the facts.—Legal Adviser.

—Engineers of steamships have found that the best lubricants are glycerine for the cylinders and castor-oil for the bearings. When castor-oil is used the main bearings seldom become heated. Only the best glycerine can be employed with advantage, but when it is of a high grade the results leave little to be desired.

Men Seeking Employment in Kitchens.

Inquiry at several employment offices discloses that frequent applications are received from men for places where they can earn a living by doing such work as is usually done by female domestics, that many have gone out to such service, and that they are, as a rule, giving very good satisfaction. This is not new here, nor on the Pacific Coast, where Chinamen are frequently found doing the work of domestics. On this side of the Continent, the line between the work done by males and females is not very closely drawn in the subterranean regions of hotels, restaurants, and even of boarding-houses; but the employment of men to a considerable extent in private houses to do the work that has hitherto been done almost entirely by "female help" amounts to a sort of new departure. It is not, perhaps, that many of the males who are doing the work of kitchen-girls on this side would acknowledge that they are imbibed to the Chinese for the fiber; they would rather allow that they were driven to seek such service by the prospect of starvation, consequent upon the extremely "hard times." In most cases where they apply for an opportunity to do such work, they are willing to accept an inclination to bargain as to the amount of the duty that will fall to them, and are willing to accept anything that will afford them a living. Those in the kitchen in such a frame of mind, the men value their opportunity to earn a living rather highly, and are independent than the usual run of "female help," and are less unbalances in demanding what may be considered as privileges, but which that class of help has come to regard as their rights. There is a substratum of fact for the ludicrous exaggeration of satirical weeklies upon the tyranny of the basement and kitchen. The growing scarcity in the number of women who are willing to accept service in a household where they will not be treated as "one of the family," the unsatisfactory help, has made it extremely difficult, even for those who are abundantly able to pay, to secure and retain satisfactory domestics in their service; and if the disposition of men to come into the work shall have the effect of weakening the tyranny of the kitchen, a good work will have been done.

There is scarcely any work falling to the domestics of the household which men are not doing. Able-bodied men are to be found in many kitchens washing dishes, scouring silver, lifting pots and kettles and doing what has hitherto been done in this country almost exclusively by female domestics. Down in the cellars men are handling coal in the washboard, wielding the clothes-pounder and laboring at the crank of the wringer. They are also engaged in the difficult art of putting a gloss on a shirt-front or imparting the requisite rigidity to a shirt-collar; but instances of such ambition are not very frequent. Men are shy about professing a knowledge of cookery. The most ignorant cases except in emergencies. They seem to increase the strength, but call it out unnaturally only to waste it. But a bath is an excellent thing as a curative agent when one has taken cold, if used judiciously.

For instance, a boy in this family long out the clothes for his mother one chilly washing day not long ago, and when he came in it appeared that he had been handling the cold, wet clothes bare-handed and bare-headed, and he was thoroughly chilled all over. This happened just after a late hearty dinner, and as the child seemed to improve I was confirmed in my suspicions that he had taken a hard cold. I had him put on his overcoat and sit with his feet to the fire in a warm room until he was thoroughly warmed, and before he went to bed he had a comfortable bath by the fire and a good rubbing; and if there was any "cold" next day, it was so slight that we did not notice it. I have tried the same method of cure for myself when warned by obstinate chilliness that I had taken cold, with excellent success, and I think it much more reasonable than to deranged the stomach by any of the popular doses used for colds. Half our colds would be avoided altogether if we did not allow ourselves to get gradually chilled by going with insufficient clothing, or sitting in chilly places, and allowing ourselves to be the condition of chilliness, because the cold does not actually pinch and sting as it does in winter. It is necessary for the human and animal systems. Stop the supply and blindness would ensue, as well as other physical deficiencies. The death and thrift of cattle, sheep, horses and hogs depend upon a due proportion of salt in their food. This article is written in reply to a query if too much salt is not given to stock. We think frequently too much is given at a time, but it is not given often enough. When taken in right quantities it aids digestion and assimilation, and without it physical development is imperfect and unhealthy.—Iowa State Register.

Salt for Stock.

Providence, in His wisdom, made salt (or the chloride of sodium) to pervade almost everything. It is not dependent on the ocean for supply. On the contrary, it is a native in all solid rocks, marls, sandstone, gypsums, as well as all vegetable growths. It is a mineral, and is found in such abundance universally required as an article of food by man and the higher order of the animal kingdom. The elements to create commercial salt are found in per cent. of chlorine and 40 per cent. of sodium. Yet impure salt contains different quantities of lime and other impure salts. The absence of these impurities is why one salt is better than another.

The salt of the ocean depends on the disintegration of rocks and soils and their solution in existence, decomposition and natural decay, and is brought by streams and rivers to the ocean. If by this process more salt is carried to the ocean than the water can hold in solution, it is deposited in deep places and caves of the sea. And this will account for the vast deposits found in rock-salt mines and caves in all lands. There are in our Western Territories immense deposits of the purest rock salt, and so soon as railroads can overcome the almost impassable mountain barriers they will supply a continental demand. We have been the fortune of the writer to see some magnificent specimens of these salt deposits. In the northwest part of Arizona, in the ranges of the Wasatch Mountains, and in canyons of some of the tributaries of the Colorado River, and eight hundred or a thousand miles from the ocean. In any contemplated railroad, there are said to be salt deposits cropping out in unquestionable bluffs from one to three hundred feet in height for hundreds of miles in extent. In Texas, also, there are horizontal beds of rock salt. In St. Domingo there are entire mountains of it. These, in the past history of our globe (the remote period of which makes the mind dizzy to contemplate), were deposited by the oceans. Leviathans and physical revolutions of the earth have transformed them into dry land and mountain ranges. It is not our object, however, to follow these speculations into the dim and misty past.

Salt pervades earth and water. It pervades all animal foods. In many countries it is used as a medium of exchange in grasses and vegetables. In others it is necessary for their health that it should be applied. It is necessary for the human and animal systems. Stop the supply and blindness would ensue, as well as other physical deficiencies. The death and thrift of cattle, sheep, horses and hogs depend upon a due proportion of salt in their food. This article is written in reply to a query if too much salt is not given to stock. We think frequently too much is given at a time, but it is not given often enough. When taken in right quantities it aids digestion and assimilation, and without it physical development is imperfect and unhealthy.—Iowa State Register.

Keeping Accounts.

Farmers and stockmen, who keep a daily account of the hours of labor, expenses and receipts, and business generally, will succeed better and make more rapid progress in all useful knowledge than those neighbors who trust entirely to memory and judgment in all their relations to these things.

Men of very limited education will soon form the habit of keeping a reliable record of all their business with their stock, their farm and with all their neighbors.

They should procure for the pocket an ordinary diary, costing from twenty-five to fifty cents. In this they can under the printed day and date, enter all transactions connected with their income and expenditures. There are also pages for special memoranda, cash accounts, etc. These entries should be made on the spot.

At home they will have such books as our stationers furnish for farmers' account, and during rainy days or hours of rest and leisure they will, with pen and ink, post from the diary all things deemed important.

There will be in the ledger, for example, an account opened with the cornfields. He will charge cost of plowing, manure, marking, seed, planting, cultivating, tapping, cutting or gathering, husking, shelling, marketing, etc., or the amount of labor required to bring about these results, and on the opposite page credit the cornfield with its product, in bushels, barrels, etc., and cash, or results obtained in pork, beef, etc.

Accounts should thus be opened and regularly kept with every distinct product; grass, wheat, barley, rye, oats, potatoes, turnips, etc., and with the horses, cattle, sheep, hogs, fruit, etc., expenditures for agricultural implements, wagons, carriages, etc. So with every laborer, and with the household expenses.

The advantages of this earn and attention to all the affairs of a farm or plantation, whether devoted to raising stock, grain, grass or roots, will be found more numerous and valuable than, when first suggested, would be deemed possible.

The farmer or stockman, thus carefully keeping before him his expenses and income, will soon have in figures and words clear and ample demonstrations of the more or less profitable parts of his farm, stocks, stocks, etc., and in the future govern himself accordingly.

Such farmers, when sent to the Legislature, would be among its most valuable members, and when the great mass of our professors thus accustom themselves to keeping accurate accounts they will not depend so largely as at present on professional politicians, or even the genuine legal profession, for Legislative bills, or the enactment of State and National laws. Our great farmers will have, after a few years careful study of their own business—trained themselves to clearer estimates of the actual needs not only of their own district, but that of the State and Nation.—Drovers' Journal.

THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, FEB. 24, . 187[illegible]

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIA LETTER.

New York, Feb. 14, 1879.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

"The February days have come, the gayest of the year." The grand Charity ball has come and gone, like a methodical annual comet. So has the famous French Cook's ball, where were music and dancing, and above all mar kets of beauty and skilled handiwork in sugar and pastry and lard in accordance with time-honored custom. So, too, has the waiters' ball, where as in former seasons, the merriment took on a "continental"—and, I fear Brother Talmage would say, so, unorthodox form. The Liederkranz ball, too, perhaps the most famous of periodical revels of the metropolis, transpired on Valentine's Eve at the Academy of Music, amid a blaze of lights, the fleece of two mammoth orchestras, borne upon banks of flowers, a vast whirl of beautiful and grotesque costumes, masks, dominoes, and all other paraphernalia of the reckless but aristocratic rout. St. Valentine himself, moreover, has passed over our heads, dropping upon them in his flight some millions of sentimental missives, not to mention a ton or so of the monstrous caricatures with which this spurtive saint is wont to fire the plebeian heart. Just think what an array! And beside all these gayeties, this little undersized month still holds in reserve for us Washington's Birthday, and the inevitable Martha Washington Reception, which comes in to crown this career of dissipation, and prepare us through sheer exhaustion to welcome the austerities of Lent.

For many years, and especially for the last three years, the exporting of live cattle and meat to Great Britain has been one of the heaviest and most rapidly growing items of our foreign business. Considerable consternation was therefore the natural consequence of a recent cablegram to the effect that strong pressure was being brought on the British Government to compel it to forbid the importation of American cattle. The reason given for this action was the alleged existence of a pestilence among our animals. This report was at first scouted on this side of the water; but still an investigation of the subject was vigorously undertaken, and sure enough, a serious amount of disease has been discovered in this city, and on both sides of Long Island Sound. Stringent measures have been adopted to prevent the spread of the pest, which has been decided to be pleuro-pneumonia. On Long Island, where the trouble is most severe, all diseased cattle are to be slaughtered, all infected ones quarantined, and all stables inspected and disinfected. $10,000 has been appropriated by the State Legislature to prosecute the war upon the plague, and there is little cause for alarm that it will spread from this point.

In some respects, the most deplorable of the many fires which have recently afflicted this island, was that which, on Thursday night last, destroyed the "New York Tattersalls," a large uptown boarding stable called after the famous London establishment of that name. Nearly ninety horses were domiciled in the building, less than twenty of which were rescued. Seventy of the noble animals, most of them blooded stock and very valuable, were burned or suffocated. The loss which is perhaps most to be regretted, is that of a pair of Norwegian ponies, owned and recently imported by Mr. Theodore Havemeyer. They were the only specimens of this beautiful breed in the country, and were valued at $4,500.

A number of firemen were more or less injured in the work of extinguishing this conflagration, one or two of whom will probably die. The mortality among these brave fellows during the performance of their duty has been so heavy this winter, that one would think there would be difficulty in keeping the ranks full, especially in view of the late discussions in our noble city government, some members of which are so zealous in the cause of retrenchment that, while they do not think it would be expedient to "cripple the public service" by reducing their own salaries, are inclined to believe that the pay of the policemen and firemen ought to be cut down. Per contra, it ought to be some consolation to the survivors of the hall dinner to see the results of a grand benefit performance which is being got up for the widows of two of their number who perished at the Brooklyn fires last week. It is said that the deceased women will receive from this benefit at least $1,000.

The bright, the energetic and—by courtesy—the fair Miss Anna Dickinson has reappeared and is now delivering from time to time her new lecture on "The Stage." She admits herself an enthusiastic lover of the Stage, and at the outset that she is not before her audience to defend a bad cause, but to magnify a good one; whereupon she gives her hearers an hour's impassioned eulogy of the theatre, which she boldly claims is more effective as a moral power than the pulpit of the present day. As usual Miss Dickinson has stirred things up a good deal, and, as might be expected has elicited various replies from the clergymen. Most of the latter combat her position, as in duty bound, but one candid parson told his congregation in the course of his sermon, a couple of Sundays since, that he thought the fearless Anna was about right—that the stage, in cases, was ably administered, while the average pulpit was so much more lobby conducted as to render a comparison of the two disadvantageous to the latter. Miss Dickinson promises us the pleasure of seeing her in a new play of her own, before very long.

The most brilliant billiard tournament ever seen in this country, or in any country so far as I know, came to a close last week. It consisted of fifty six public games, played in the great hall of the Cooper Institute, by eight of the most expert players in America. The audiences were large and enthusiastic, and of exceptionally good quality, including a large proportion of ladies. The prizes distributed amounted to some $2,500 in value. RADIX.

The Senatorship.

Mr Christiancy's resignation of the office of Senator has been announced to the Legislature by Gov. Croswell, and that body will now proceed to elect his successor. Zachariah Chandler is undoubtedly the choice of great majority of the members, as he surely is of the masses of the Republican party in the State. He is fully worthy of that succession. He is a charter in mber of the Republican party and from its organization to this day has been staunch and true, unflinching and unyielding in his adherence to its noble principles; indefatigable and positive in his zealous work in behalf of its righteous policies. His political record is well known, and bears no stain of dishonor. He is well fitted to the extent of being thoroughgoing and positive. There is no half work in his method, nor his aims. He is also a man of undoubted integrity. His bitterest partisan opponents are free to concede that, and to express their admiration of the man for his firmness, even though they count it obstinacy, and for his strict honesty. When he was retired from the Senate four years ago by factious treachery and foul coalition, the opposition press was forced to acknowledge that his record was clear of all taint and all suspicion of corrupt action. Yet against no man in the United States had there been directed a more persistent shower of detraction for 18 years than against him. But their sharpest weapons were turned aside by the impenetrable armor of his unblemished record. Friend and foe alike implicitly trusted him when he said yea or nay; and never was that trust betrayed. Of both Lincoln and Grant he was a warm-hearted personal friend and supporter. During the war of the rebellion it was his unrepining and boldness that was chiefly instrumental in breaking the spell that so long held our gallant army spell-bound, chafing and at times almost discouraged on the Potomac and in the Virginia swamps, and set it free for the vigorous work and the onward march to the complete triumph of the national cause under General Grant. And in war and in peace alike Senator Chandler was ever mindful of the interests of his own state and of the gallant men whom she sent into the field. He was at all times the open foe of corruption and of corrupt combinations and conspiracies, of whatever character, and his intuition and almost absolutely unerring quickness of perception was the occasion of the detection and thwarting of many a scheme of plunder. When the noted diatribe upon the salary grab bill was going on, he was unsparing in inexpressible and well-deserved denunciation of that measure—and all will remember how promptly both Chandler and Ferry washed their hands of all stain of the back salary money by returning the share that the expulsion law gave to them into the United States Treasury. After he retired from the Senate, and while Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Chandler made a record for executive ability that any man might be proud of—such as forced from those who had previously been among the most vicious of his critics to speak well of his work and acknowledge the reality of the reforms which he instituted. The detractors and slanders of Mr. Chandler are not many nor conspicuous now. The few that persist him do it in a sneaking, cowardly fashion, avoiding fair and open charges, but secretly hoping that they can honestly make such opposition as that he must expect from a certain puny, envious crew, but should not have a feather's weight against him at Lansing, and it will not with astonish, well informed men Chandler is present and aggressive in politics in behalf—what he conceives to be right and against what he sees to be wrong. Only wrong does he fear, and envious slanderers hate him. Such men as he will be needed more than ever in the next Congress, and he will be there. The Republicans of Michigan are not disposed to yield their choice for the sake of passing either the open or secret enemies of Republicanism; they "have made other arrangements."—Grand Rapids Eagle

The Southern speeches mean that the South, while pretending to abandon the war clause, will press heavy subsidies for so-called improvement schemes, and will demand Northern Democratic cooperation as the price of Southern Democratic solidity and fidelity.

An Astonishing Fact.

A large proportion of the American people are to-day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant existence of ease and quietness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this as you will see if you throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. H. Hazelton, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Millions of bottles of this medicine have been given away to try its virtues, with astonishing results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively sold by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

On the 10th, at Troy, N. Y., G. F. Simmons, crazed by the elopement of his wife, poisoned his three children and then cut his own throat.

The officials of the Ohio & Mississippi Railroad deny the report that trains were detained at Flora, Ill., on a reconnaissance, on account of the enforcement of the State Sunday laws. They say the dispatch to that effect originated in some misinformed or evilly-disposed person.

A TERRIBLE accident occurred at Kansas City, Mo., on the 11th. The walls of a cat being made there for the Chicago & Alton Railroad caved in, and four teams and about forty men were buried under 6,000 yards of falling earth. Six persons were killed outright, and several others were wounded.

NELSON SHERMAN, on the 12th, issued another call for the redemption of 5-20 bonds. The sum called for is $50,350,000, interest and principal payable on the 12th of May.

THE Missouri Court of Appeals has decided, in the case of an application for an injunction to restrain the St. Louis School Board from permitting the teaching of foreign languages and the common branches in the public schools of that city, that the whole matter is in the hands of the legislature, and that courts have no power in the premises.

A NATIONAL CONFERENCE of colored citizens will be held at Nashville, Tenn., on the 6th of May. The object of the gathering is said to be "to consider the situation of the colored people in the South in respect to the enjoyment of life, liberty and property; also, their educational, moral, social and political condition, and the question of emigration."

SECY SHERMAN sent a letter to the National House of Representatives, on the 11th, in which he states that the estimate of expenditures for the next fiscal year amounts to $261,262,142. The estimated receipts are: From customs, $133,930,000; internal revenue, $108,000,000; miscellaneous sources, $18,300,000; total receipts, $257,840,000, leaving a deficiency of $37,062,419.

On the evening of the 13th, the New York Tattersalls was entirely destroyed by fire. Of the eighty horses stabled there, over sixty perished.

THE late reports of the reappearance of the yellow fever at various points in the South are reassuringly denied by dispatches from Louisville and New Orleans.

WHILE doing a trapeze act in a Detroit theatre, on the evening of the 10th, Mrs. Dr. Austin lost her grasp on the bar, and fell headlong a distance of thirty feet into the proscenium. The result was a broken collar-bone, three fractured ribs and fatal internal injuries.

A MEETING was held at Syracuse, N. Y., on the 10th, participated in by Bishop Peck and Huntington, Chancellor Haven and other well-known Methodist clergymen and laymen, at which it was resolved to take measures for the suppression of the Ophelia Commune.

AN eleven-year-old boy, named Willie Zeigler, committed suicide, in Philadelphia, on the 13th, by hanging himself in the cellar. He lived with his grandmother, who was absent from home at the time the deed was committed. The reason assigned for the suicide is a disturbance of mental balance caused by reading religious books.

AT Somerville, Me., a few days ago, Ephraim Baxter and wife left home to do some trading, leaving their three children, aged four years, two and a half years, and eight months, alone in the house. By some means the building caught fire, and, with its contents, was destroyed, the three children perishing in the flames. About a year before another child of the same parents was burned to death.

SINCE the death of L. H. Conklin, late County Treasurer of Dowgas County, N. Y., his accounts have been investigated, and a shortage discovered of over $13,000.

A NEGRO named Sam Hall is lying in the County Jail at Columbus, Ohio, convicted, on circumstantial evidence solely, of the murder of a man named Dunlap, in 1875, and sentenced to be hung therefor. Hall says that he was in the State Penitentiary for horse stealing, from 1872 to 1876, escaping in the latter year, and consequently could not have committed the murder. Investigation has shown this to be true, and it is thought he will soon be released. Had he not been in prison at the time of the murder, he would be hung for a crime he did not commit.

A FIRE broke out in the Soldiers' Orphans' Home, near Xenia, Ohio, on the morning of the 10th. There were 600 children in the house at the time, and many narrow escapes are reported. The building was entirely destroyed, the teachers and officials losing all their personal effects. The loss to the State is about $75,000; no insurance.

The selection of Hon. Zachariah Chandler as United States Senator from Michigan is very gratifying to the friends of this and other States. A poor, trembling drunkard, wearing an old cast-off sailor's suit, came past a pleasant home on Wabash Av., Chicago, where six little girls were playing. The supply and consumption of lumber in the valley of the Detroit River, which empties into Lake St. Clair, from 1850, will be of interest in the progress of our lumber trade. It has been a subject of much discussion in the courts of Michigan, before a court composed of army officers came to a close on the 11th inst. Recorder Lee, on behalf of the Government, submitted his argument against Major Rans, and, the court having heard it, retired itself into secret session. It will remain with closed doors until it makes out its report, which, together with the decision reached by it in the premises, will be forwarded to Washington. That decision will not be reached for public until reversed or approved by the "powers that be" at the Capitol.

There was a curious debate in the House last Friday in which Gen Butler hinted that at no distant day Ex might reconsider that the time had come for pensioning Confederate soldiers out on levity as we pension those of the Union side, and that their paying alike of some of those who lost something to their efforts to destroy the Union, or not paying any Union claims at all. This is not the language in which the General defines his position, but it is the logic of the idea which he presented. Carried to its legitimate conclusion it would be the judgment that loyalty is no virtue and treason is no crime; that the latter it is to be rewarded or the other given cut to 1 seem to. When a Government is not strong enough to punish treason, it is not.

From a few wooden barn lodges six or eight years ago, they now occupy the finest part of the city and their numbers have increased from scores to thousands. Their property, consisting of a rickety printing office and a small water-cure, has increased to a magnificent sanitarium, costing $125,000; a college, $40,000; a tabernacle, $30,000; and a large printing office and bindery, $25,000. Their society property is worth about $250,000, all constructed within a few years.

Angell's Sentence.

CHARLES W. ANGELL, indicted for the larceny and embezzlement of some $120,000 in bonds and cash from the Pullman Palace-Car Company, appeared before the Criminal Court in Chicago, on the 27th inst., and entered a plea of guilty. Before sentence was passed, Mr. A. S. Weinheimer, Angell's successor to the Secretaryship of the company, was sworn, and testified to the prisoner's taking the bonds and money. The bonds, he said, were in New York, and the cash in the company's safe in Chicago, the combination to which Angell, the prisoner, had in his possession. Of the bonds, $80,000 had been recovered, and of the cash, $4,983. The Court then asked Mr. Angell if he desired to make any statement. He replied, "Not any." Judge Williams then turned to the prisoner, who stood with folded arms, and addressed him as follows:

"In this case, sir, you have not only taken property which was not your own, and improperly committed a criminal act, but you have committed a crime of that of such a character as to shake the confidence of the community very largely in parties who are intrusted with large amounts of money. It is sad such acts as this that astonish and shock a community unfortunately. We regret that men who have been entirely dedicated all their lives of such moral influence, who have had nothing to keep them from evil, and have always been subject to the most disastrous and wicked surroundings, such that these men should sometimes commit crime. We expect to have perfect life. We look upon those as a matter of course. Some of these are perhaps almost excusable on account of the condition in which the latter have been for times past, or the condition in which they were at the time the theft was committed. But this act of yours is an act that cannot be palliated, so far as I know, in any way. You had unlimited confidence bestowed upon you, and to violate that confidence, and in the abuse of it, you converted the money and your employers—not in any little way, through a strong necessity which might have been brought to bear upon you, but you did it in a wholesale way, and when there was no necessity at all for any such action on your part. I could not sit here as a Judge, and hold up my head, and punish the small offenders who are before me from day to day and cease to punish the larger offenders. You have been a man of standing in this community. You are very intelligent. The surroundings which you have had for some time past should have been not from a crime of this kind. It has been accumulated through the whole country, and I must punish you, not only sparingly, because the law does not permit me to do it, but I must punish you to the extent of the law. I am reared in this case that the law does not permit me to punish you more severely—but because I have the least unkindness for you, but because I reconsider the crime of such an aggravating character that, it would indicate a more severe punishment, I find that justice to the community demanded it.

"The sentence of the Court will be that you be confined in the Penitentiary for the term of one year. That is the shortest term of the time I can sentence you."

Angell listened to the severe language of the Judge as if he thought he was only a part of a machine and the Judge another, each one in its province performing its particular duty, and as the Court ceased speaking he turned himself toward the passage leading to the Penitentiary with a barely perceptible smile on his unshaded lip. In a moment he passed out of sight.

The Plague in Moscow in 1770-71.

The appearance of the plague in the Astrakhan Government has revived the memory of the terrible outbreak in Moscow during part of the years 1770 and 1771. The first victims were the soldiers whom shot and steel had spared during the war waged against Turkey. It then made its way into Russia from the southwest, extending as far north as Serpukhof. It first began to declare itself in December, 1770, but it was for some time ignored by denial, the Empress Catherine II. writing to say that if any one said there was a plague in Moscow he lied; nothing but fever was to be feared. But after being kept under by the winter's frost, and officially protested against during the summer, the pest burst forth in the autumn with a fury which even issues could not control. By the middle of September, 1771, the condition of Moscow was terrible. From 800 to 1,000 deaths took place every day. The upper classes fled, and from the plague-stricken town, and the populace took to rioting. On the 16th (27th) of September broke out what is generally known as the "Schumov limit," or plague riot. The populace assembled in crowds before one of the gates of the Kremlin, seeking to avail themselves of the good offices of the Bogolyubof miraculous Madonna. The Archbishop Amvrosi Zertis Kamensky prudently ordered the picture to be removed from its usual locality to a more open spot, in order to avoid the danger likely to arise from the thronging together of so many plague-fearing worshipers. A cry was raised that he was stealing the holy portrait, and that he must be put to death. He fled in disguise from the Kremlin, and took refuge in the Donskoi monastery. Thither, however, he was pursued, and there he was torn from behind the altar. "For two hours," according to the evidence of an eye-witness, he was beaten with a cudgel. Then he was left for dead. But after a time his right hand was seen to move, whereupon the rioters again attacked him, beating him on the head till he died. Only by grape-shot was the riot suppressed. A few days later arrived in Moscow Count Gregory Orlof, sent expressly by the Empress to put down the plague. The city, so long deprived of guidance, received him with rapture. And, in truth, he deserved to be hailed with acclamation; for he attacked the plague with much vigor that he overcame it. Drawing a number of sanitary cordons round Moscow, he maintained so strict a quarantine that even the dogs which ran across his lines and the crows which flew over them were shot. All popular gatherings were prohibited; no burials were allowed within the city; and the faithful were even prevented from entering the churches, being obliged to listen in divine service from without. Before Count Orlof's arrival the common people had showed a decided aversion toward the hospitals, in which they were roughly treated and badly fed by coarse and ignorant medical practitioners. Orlof inspected the buildings set apart for the sufferers, visited them frequently, and soon brought about a change greatly for the better in the treatment of the patients. The number of daily deaths soon fell to 300, and then became smaller and smaller until the plague was stayed. Count Orlof was enabled on Nov. 28 (O. S.) to leave Moscow rejoicing over a clean bill of health. On his return to St. Petersburg the Count was received with many manifestations of joy and triumph. A medal was struck in his honor, bearing on one side his portrait, and on the other a representation of Curtius leaping into the gulf, with an inscription that "Russia, too, possesses such sons." Hereabouts staying the Lernan Hydra would have formed, perhaps, a more appropriate image.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Placer Mining.

The first gold that a country furnishes is generally derived from placer washings. This is the simplest and most inexpensive method of obtaining the precious metal, and therefore best adapted to the use of the pioneer or discoverer whose capital and capacity for labor is limited. Along the banks of streams small water-worn pieces of gold are found; investigation frequently reveals the metal in greater quantities; then placer mining in its simplest form begins. Gold alone, of the precious metals, is found in placers where native silver occurs, it is always in connection with the original auriferous rocks, never separated from them. Nature, however, has furnished us gold both in vein and placer mines.

In placer mines, or more properly "diggings," the gold occurs separated from the rock in which it was primarily contained. The auriferous rocks were decomposed by various natural forces, and the gold, sand and gravel removed by water. The distance by which the particles were carried dependent upon the size and rapidity of the current and the weight of the particles.

The larger and heavier stones, gravel and sand, were deposited first, afterward the finer material. We find the gold in consequence of its specific gravity in the bottom of the stream mixed with gravel and sand. The nearer we approach the bed-rock the more abundant is the metal.

Placers are of two kinds—shallow and deep diggings. The deposits which are near the surface, and have been left by recent streams, are called shallow diggings. They usually occur in the beds of ravines and on the bars or flats in a river. In the deep diggings, the gold sometimes lies at great depths, the stream having been filled up with earth, rocks and debris. At Tuolumne, Cal., the bed of the stream in which the precious metal is found is 150 feet below the present surface and is covered with basalt and volcanic ashes. Great labor is here necessary to procure the gold.

Shallow placers are most primitive in their nature, and require for their working easily obtained and inexpensive implements. Natural forces have broken up the rock which contained the gold; therefore, unlike vein mining, only a sm ple washing is needful, in order to obtain the pure metal; while in vein-mining and deep placers complicated processes are necessary. The washing is accomplished in pans, rockers or sluices. The pan is usually made of cast iron, as it resists the action of mercury. The sides are sloping and its diameter is about fourteen inches. The rich earth is placed in the pan, which is dipped in water and shaken; the lighter particles float over the edge, and the stones and gravel collect on top; these are scraped off with the hand and thrown away. This operation is continued until the earth is washed out and the metal remains; or a little mercury is added to amalgamate the gold in order to prevent the loss of any fine particles. On a larger scale this washing is accomplished by means of a rocker, which is like an old-fashioned cradle, to one end of which a screen is attached to receive the rich earth. Water flows over the screen, while a rocking motion is continued.

Sluices are long, narrow troughs across the bottom of which bars are nailed, called "riffle bars." The "pay" dirt is shoveled in and water allowed to flow over the mass. The lighter particles are carried away by the current; while the gold, on account of its weight, sinks to the bottom and is amalgamated, either on copper plates or with mercury placed behind the riffle bars. Four-fifths of the gold from the California placers have been extracted by sluices, and this is the method employed where large quantities of earth are to be treated. Deep placers are generally worked by hydraulic mining.—Mining Stock Journal.

—Archbishop Henni, of Milwaukee, who recently celebrated his golden jubilee, has addressed a circular letter to all priests in his Diocese, conveying an imperative order to desist from writing communications to the secular press, discussing the question of the appointment of a Coadjutor Bishop. All letters or communications bearing upon the subject, instead of being sent to the political press for publication, should, he says, either be addressed to him or forwarded to Rome.

Result—he ascertained that the average attendance at each church was 60-84-six persons, and that there are 132 churches in a district which needs only fifty, or, as the Alliance puts it, "the poor and struggling Christians of Kansas have built eighty churches more than was demanded by the Gospel—eighty churches that were asked for not by public appeal, but by missionarians."

—The principal of the Northern Indiana Normal School has recently made a judicious experiment with his students. He placed each week fifty copies of a good daily and of several papers and magazines in the reading-room. At first the students seemed indifferent, but gradually they began to read, and in a short time they showed great interest in the leading topics of the day, and conversation at the table and elsewhere changed very much for the better. His experience leads the principal to strongly recommend the use of newspapers in general exercises and in reading classes.—Exchange.

—The amount and kind of punishment inflicted at school is one of the best tests of a teacher's capacity and fitness for the station he occupies. No subject connected with school management is more delicate, none more important, and none requires more judgment, discretion or wisdom. As a general rule, the best teachers are those who punish the least; and the wisest, those who make the best excuse when punishment must be inflicted. Whatever savors of ill-temper or brutality, whatever tends to the injury of the body, mind, or sensibilities of the child, is to be unsparingly condemned.—Educational Weekly.

A Curious Question.

A very curious question growing out of the election in Callaway County has been brought up before the Supreme Court of the State. At the election referred to there were two Democratic tickets in the field—the regular ticket, nominated by a formally-called Convention, and an independent or low-salary one, nominated by those who were dissatisfied with the first. At the Independent Convention an appeal was made to the people in behalf of the low-salary movement and ticket, and the following preamble and resolution were adopted:

"WHEREAS, There are plenty of good men, competent and honest, who are willing to perform the services of the respective offices of the county for the following compensation, viz:

Collector, per year
Probate Judge, per year	$1,500
County Clerk, per year	1,200
Circuit Clerk, per year	1,200

"Therefore, be it

"Resolved, That we will support no man for the offices mentioned, who will not agree to perform the services at the rate fixed in these resolutions."

The independent ticket nominated on this platform was elected—Samuel B. Collier, for Probate Judge, among other candidates. But Collier's defeated opponent, M. G. Singleton, claims that the election was illegal, and that Collier is an usurper of and intruder on an office which he has no right to hold. The grounds of this assertion are that the offer to serve as Probate Judge for $1,200 a year, when the lawful fees of the office amounted to $2,600 a year, was, in its nature, a direct bribe to voters; "that said respondent, in order to obtain votes for said office, publicly declared to said voters, on divers occasions during said canvass, that said fees amounted to $2,600 per annum, but that he would perform the duties of said office if elected for the sum of $1,200; that by electing himself as Probate Judge, and others for other places named as candidates on the aforesaid platform, they would save to the county $5,600 per annum;" that respondent "caused tickets to be printed with the following heading thereon: 'Low-Salary Democratic County Ticket,' and caused said tickets to be placed in the hands of said voters at said election, and by said words did further publish and proclaim to said voters his said corrupt offers, with the view of inducing said voters to believe that in voting for him for said office they would reduce the expenses of said county." The action is brought by Att'y-Gen. Smith as relator, who, for the reasons set forth, asks for a judgment of ouster against Collier. If the Court should decide that the election virtually would apply to all the present officers of the county chosen last fall, and to the governor, the Representative, who was chosen on the Low-Salary ticket.—Missouri Republican.

The Distress in England.

The general distress throughout the country is daily becoming more and more apparent, and affecting all classes of society. Occasional incidents show more vividly than long histories what a condition we are getting into. Since the collapse of the Glasgow Bank, several of the oldest banking houses in the country have gone down, carrying with them numerous manufacturers who depended on them for their current resources, and the closing of their manufactories has thrown thousands of families into instant poverty and distress. Even merchant commerce are so bad everywhere that the most established houses are driven to reduce their rate of wages, and this leads to strikes in almost every branch of industry. The very docks at Liverpool are comparatively deserted, and the ship-owners, whose reduction of wages has led to the strike there, threaten to remove their ships to Bristol and Cardiff, and especially to Antwerp, where labor is cheaper. Yesterday it was announced that the celebrated ship-building firm of Penn & Co., and another almost as large, at Greenock, are compelled upon a reduction of 7½ per cent., and the result is that their 2,000 workmen go out on a strike next Monday. The same thing is going on everywhere.

Some of the minor incidents of the general distress are extremely heartrending. At a recent meeting of the shareholders of one of the exploded financial concerns, a lady—I mean a real English lady, by title and descent—declared that in six months the company had stripped her of £70,000 (which means $350,000), and that she was now supporting herself and family, and her mother, nearly 100 years old, by keeping a coffee shop in an obscure London street. The brother of one of the Glasgow Bank Directors, on hearing that they had been sentenced to imprisonment, literally took to his bed and died of a broken heart. But the saddest case of all is that of a well-known Liverpool merchant, eighty years old, who, after forty years of successful business, during which period he had been respected and honored, finding himself in a strait, succumbed to temptation, forged a bill of exchange for £1,000, and was this week sentenced to five years' penal servitude.—London Cor. Chicago Journal.

Dr. Schliemann.

Dr. Schliemann resumed last October the exhumation of the four prehistoric cities which he found lying one above another at Hissarlik, near the Dardanelles. He has now reached the lowermost but one of what he has identified with King Priam's Troy. After carrying on his operations for a couple of months they were cut short by winter, and in December he paid a flying visit to London to add to the collection bearing his name at the South Kensington Museum his third share of the fresh finds. Among them may be named a pig in ivory, to match those in terra-cotta, and above all a dagger of meteoric steel, found in the Royal Trojan house, the very first iron turned up by him in any prehistoric city either in the Troad or the Peloponnesus. According to the last letters received by the archæologist's friends in London since his return to his home at Athens, he will resume his work at Hissarlik on the 1st of March, and continue it until the 1st of June. He has obtained from the Turkish Government permission to sink shafts to the large conical tombs scattered over the Plain of Troy, and known to local tradition as those of the Homeric heroes, as well as to the Village of Koum-Kale. "It is true," he says, "that the six heroic tumuli hitherto excavated have given no result whatever; but I attribute the failure merely to the inexperience of the excavators, and I feel confident that, if not more, I shall at least find in each tomb the key to its chronology; nay, I venture to promise this even for those tumuli which have already been excavated." As to Koum-Kale, it is his firm belief that it covers the ruins of the ancient City Aehilleion, mentioned by Herodotus, Strabo and Pliny.—N. Y. Tribune.

MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

—If a person has smooth brows and crow's feet about the eyes, the latter do not denote old age, as many suppose, but they are the result of sleeping on the side. This a German physician of great renown has discovered. The pressure upon the temple and cheeks leaves wrinkles at the corners and underneath the eyes.

—It appears that filtered raw petroleum has lately been employed as a lubricant on some of the Austrian railways, the volatile parts having been previously evaporated at 212 boiling point of water, and a small percentage of vegetable and animal oils added. The first experiments made in this line were not attended with very promising results, the oil being too thin and the journals heating too frequently. By degrees, however, these difficulties have been surmounted—that is, the oil was improved and special boxes made to meet its requirements, petroleum being thus rendered a reliable lubricant.

—The remarkable metal known as wootz, or Indian steel, is now imitated with considerable success in some of the workshops of Europe, the process being as follows: Small pieces of very good forged iron or steel are put in a crucible and covered with charcoal. Air is carefully excluded, and the mass exposed to heat until it passes a pasty state—carburet of iron; this is easily pulverized, and in this state it is mixed with pure ammonia and subjected for a long time to a white heat in a crucible, when it becomes white and brittle. If one-sixteenth to one-twelfth of this white mixture be added to pure cast steel, a very close imitation of Indian steel is said to be the result. Commercially speaking, genuine raw steel or wootz comes in three forms, namely—in bullet-shaped pieces of a certain weight as they come in the pots, and which come from Calcutta; in cakes of about two pounds and a half, from Bombay, and in cylindrical rods of about the same weight from Golconda.—N. Y. Sun.

A writer in the London Journal asserts that the "thing" called "writing," exhibited in the fracture of good iron, is only the effect of the light reflected from the inner surfaces of the myriads of minute cells formed by the fracture, the form of which cells, in their normal state, is spherical, or nearly so, but becomes flattened in the process of rolling. That the mechanical properties of tenacity, ductility, etc., are greatly dependent upon the perfection of this cell system, is argued from the fact that a crystallized, malleable iron does not show prisms in its fracture, but a number of facets or planes crossing the cells at right angles, cutting them off short. The process of rolling into plates or sheets does not obliterate these cells, but merely modifies them, as they widen out under pressure, the thin partitions become laminated, and on the regularity of this lamination the quality of the plate very much depends. The cell system of copper and silver is the reverse of iron, a result of the pouring of the copper into molds, but the cells are afterward altered by pressure in rolling, etc., but never destroyed.

Animals Sensitive to Ridicule.

Mr. Sidney Buxton, in one of his amusing papers on animals in the Journal World for February, says that dogs and horses are, so far as he knows, the only animals sensitive to ridicule, while cats and birds are known to manifest that they are being laughed at. He tells of a pony of his own which gets very cross when disparaging remarks are made upon him, and "becomes furious and shamps about his stall, putting back his ears and attempting to bite," if he is openly laughed at, while praise greatly pleases him. The truth is, that it is only those creatures which can feel sympathy with men which can also appreciate ridicule. The horse sympathizes evidently with many of his rider's feelings and amusements, while the dog can enter into no small proportion of his feelings. But birds and cats, though often exceedingly affectionate, and full of attachment to persons, hardly ever attempt to enter into human feelings—as Cowper's dog "Beau," for instance, entered into the poet's desire to possess himself of the water-lily. The hatred of ridicule always accompanies a capacity for sympathy. Certainly dogs, and probably horses, know the difference between being laughed at in derision, as we laugh at a fool, and being laughed at in admiration, as we laugh at a good rectic actor, and enjoy the latter as much as they resent the former. It is questionable, however, whether some parrots do not understand and enjoy the practice of making fun of their human acquaintances—do not appreciate the art of duping, and take pleasure in it.—Spectator.

The recent explosion on board the British man-of-war Thunderer was attended by some terrifying incidents. The gas from the explosion descended into the deepest recesses of the iron monster, and extinguished all the lights. The men between decks therefore found themselves suddenly plunged into Cimmerian darkness, without having the least idea of what had happened, the machinery meanwhile going full speed ahead. It speaks well for the discipline on board that no panic ensued. Some of the men in the turret at the time of the explosion held their hands before their eyes and thus preserved their sights, although the exposed parts of their faces were terribly burned.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

—If you want eggs in winter never keep old hens. When a hen is three years old the best use she can be put to is to be turned into the soup pot. No matter how well they are fed and attended to old fowls will not give eggs in winter. Give fresh water, and so prevent them from drinking snow water, which is very injurious to poultry.—Poultry Journal.

—A correspondent of an exchange writes that he has milked cows for thirty years, and has found many that were lively with their feet. The most effectual method of preventing kicking, he says, is the strap buckled tight around the body just forward of the hip bones and close to the forward teats. They may dance a little on first trial, but soon give it up and remain quiet. After using it for a time it can be dispensed with, as they stand quiet without it.

—How to Plant Potatoes.—The number of bushels to the acre must of course depend upon the size of the potatoes and the way they are cut. If planted in hills they should be about three feet and ten inches apart each way, and if in drills from fifteen to twenty inches apart, and there is a single eye in the piece it is sufficient, although some people plant them whole and others cut to two eyes in the pieces. We have cut them in halves and also in small pieces with one eye each, and no perceptible difference in the crop, and therefore we think it is often combined with cream and butter. The bonnets with flaring brims have no face trimming, but are lined with satin of a becoming color. A wreath of foliage or of grasses in the new roseau or reed-green shades passes around the crown, and satin ribbon of the same green shade is passed plainly over the crown, tying down the sides, and is knotted under the chin for strings. Sometimes this reed-green satin ribbon is pale pink on the opposite side, or else faience blue, or it may be the new cream tint called Sazonna. Pink with blue in Pompadour combinations is also seen in the new ribbons, and there is also much brocaded satin. The satins for millinery are the soft qualities spoken of in Mme. Raymond's article, and in Garland-finished satins. India muslin edged with Breton lace trims some of the finest French chips. The brim has a wide shirred bindings of India muslin, and above it at least an inch in breadth both inside and out, while beyond this, inside the brim, is a puffing of velvet either of black or bottled green. The top of the crown has a soft crimped white ostrich feather held by some veined leaves of dark green velvet. The strings of doubled Indian muslin, edged with plaited Breton lace, cross the crown, are carried in the back and are fastened under the chin. In direct contrast to this is the dress bonnet of black Spanish lace, the sides of which are turned up a fourth of a yard wide, which is tied in a large Alsacian bow on top, passes beneath the sides and is tied under the chin; some green foliage made of transparent crape in roseau shades is placed on the sides, and a chased arabesque ring of gold holds the Alsacian bow in place. On plain chip bonnets are many very small pipings of satin of the same shade as the chip, while others have silk with cords stitched in on the outside.

The round hats for dressy wear at summer resorts are very picturesque. Some of these are made of white China crape, with the broad brim turned up directly at eye line, the forehead, and filled in with crushed roses or marechal-niels in pale ecru and pink shades; two large white ostrich plumes cover the crown. Broad-brimmed Leghorn hats have each side caught down with square bows of cream-colored satin ribbon, and a bouquet of field flowers. Gray chip round hats have high brigand crowns, and the brim is turned up on the left side. Persian damask silk is tied like a handkerchief around the crown. The black chip round hats for city use are of English shapes, and in the style known last year as Equestrienne. Some of these are trimmed with brocaded gauze in colors, and others with black satin-striped gauze.—Harper's Bazar.

—In Paris, recently, a young woman went into one of the great drapery houses to shop with her maid. One of the watchers of the establishment presently tapped her on the shoulder and asked her to follow him to the searching-room. "You have just put a pair of new gloves into your pocket, mademoiselle; don't deny it." "I know I have," said the young lady, quietly; "and if you will be good enough to look inside them you will see that, as they were bought at another house, they could hardly have been stolen from this." This proved to be the case. The watcher had made a mistake, and was profuse with excuses. "Now," said the girl, turning to her maid, "go to the nearest Commissary of Police and tell him that the daughter of Prince Orloff requires his protection." Her father was the Russian Ambassador.

THE mortality in the Village of Vetlianka, in Astrakhan, where the plague made its first appearance, appears to have been frightful. Two people, says a correspondent, died like flies, and the corpses lay unburied in the streets.

A COUNTRY blacksmith out West put up a notice: "No hosses shodded Sunday except sickness and death."

NEVER give up the chip. Dr. Bull's Cough Syrup may cure you, as it has done others. It costs little, and can never harm. Price, 25 cents.

Spring Boards.

The first importations of French bonnets show the large Clarissa Harlowe shapes, with brims that flare above the forehead, and are tied down closely at the sides, and also small bonnets with close brims like those popularly worn during the winter. The soft crowns now worn in rags and turbans of velvet or satin are so much liked that they have been reproduced in chip and straw bonnets. These have close fronts, and are apt to be trimmed in Alsatian style with a large bow on top. There are also soft crowns of satin, either plain or striped, or else of damasse silk in Persian patterns, used with chip brims. Faucheux, or three-cornered half handkerchiefs of white satin, embroidered in colors, and edged with Breton lace, are also used on the crowns of chip bonnets. A peculiar novelty sent over from the best French millinery is the "Snow-Ball," for the entire bonnet, or else braids of white-color alternating with white chip on the entire bonnet. A great deal of wine-colored satin ribbon is used for trimming the cera chips that will be worn early next year. The new spring, and this is often combined with cream and butter. The bonnets with flaring brims have no face trimming, but are lined with satin of a becoming color. A wreath of foliage or of grasses in the new roseau or reed-green shades passes around the crown, and satin ribbon of the same green shade is passed plainly over the crown, tying down the sides, and is knotted under the chin for strings. Good Farm Hands.

THERE are many young men seeking employment on farms who do not seem to comprehend what the term "good farm hand" means. It is not merely an ability and willingness to work. Nor is it enough that he is acquainted with the routine of farm labor. Laborers come in contact with the family and especially the sons of the farmer, and as a matter of conscience and duty the employer wants help of good moral character, who not only keep sober and are always at the place of business, but who will not be leading his sons—the pride and hope of his life—all the foul lessons with which too many laborers are familiar. When an affectionate and kind mother first hears her son swearing, or learns of his smoking cigars, she is generally informed that such things come from the example and teachings of the hired help. A farmer not only wants his help kind to his stock, but it is of far more importance that they should be careful of the morals of his children. In hiring hands, those who use liquor or smoke should be taken only when strictly temperate and moral ones cannot be had. The practice of smoking is a serious one on a farm. It is probable that half the fires in the country which destroy barns are caused by careless smokers. It is a beastly and dirty practice at best, but when it endangers so seriously a man's property, he should discriminate against smoking. We acknowledge the legal right of any man to smoke, but the right to smoke implies them is equally as just. Profanity, obscenity, intemperance, disregard of the law of God and the State, etc., should debar any and all from the farm and from a free intercourse with the farmer's family, and we trust in employing help farmers will look more to the moral health of their rising sons, as well as the security of their property. It is due to the future character of our country that the farmers should bear faithful testimony against intemperance, vice, immorality and obscenity in all their forms. And young men who are loose on all these questions should be taught that on the farm, with the innocent children, is no place for anything which is unclean in thought, word or action.—Iowa State Register.

Snow-Raised Bread.

A correspondent of the English Mechanic writes "that snow, when incorporated with flour, performs the same office as baking powder or yeast. I have this morning for breakfast partaken of a delicious bread-cake, made last evening and which was made as follows: The cake when baked weighed about three-quarters of a pound. A cup of sweet unskimmed, fine, dry, clean snow was intimately stirred with a spoon into the dry flour, and to this was added a teaspoonful of caraways and a little butter and salt. Then sufficient cold water was added with the dough of the proper usual consistency (simply stirred in with the spoon, not kneaded by the warm hands), and then immediately put into a quick oven and baked three-quarters of an hour. It turned out very light and palatable. I have understood, but have yet to test it, that boiled or steam puddings, dumplings, sailors' 'duff' and the like can be made light by the same process.—The Athenæum.

The above is a paradox to many that frozen water in any form should produce an expansive effect, as it is already by condensation reduced to its utmost capability. But that snow actually has this property is well known to every housewife in connection with the manufacturing effects on the hardened clods of its field. The true reason appears to be—that frozen water in the interlaced snow crystals hold imprisoned a large quantity of condensed atmospheric air, which, when the snow is warmed by thawing among the clods and very rapidly in the dough, expands enormously and acts the part of the carbonic acid gas in either baking powder or yeast. I take the precise action to be then, not due in any way to the snow itself, but simply to the expansive power of the air lodged between the interstices of the snow crystals by application of heat. This theory, if carefully followed out, might perchance give a clue to find a simple and perfectly innocuous method of raising bread and pastry."

THE sober Scots have been infected by the lottery mania. The success of the French scheme has induced them to try a similar method of raising money wherewith to pay the debts of the unfortunate shareholders in the City of Glasgow Bank, and a large meeting has been held to settle the preliminaries. Six million tickets at five dollars each are to be issued.

AT a recent conference meeting in New York a man got up and said he had long wished to speak, but his wife wouldn't let him. His wife had died, however, and having his liberty at last he proposed to exercise it. In about two minutes the entire conference wept over the death of the lady as over the loss of a personal friend.—Buffalo Express.

PUBLIC NOTICE.

I, JOHN HANNAH, being a STOCKHOLDER, by trade, for 3 years, after first the want of some means whereby I could better keep at the bar, so that I could work it as a set, for advantage. This induced me to make many experiments with different substances which offered the best promises of success. It was on one of these occasions that I discovered the wonderful effects of Florida Silicon as the thinning fashion.

I had a dye in mine of my fingers which were bent or shut up in my hand in a manner, by the contraction of the cords. But they were very troublesome to me in my daily avocation. I could not handle my tools as I wished, and upon thought I would have my fingers cut off to get them out of the way. I have used everything that offered any hope of relief, but all in vain. Well, I say, I was working with Electro Silicon at the forge, and of course could not prevent its coming in contact with my hands.

I took no notice of the effect

The President in 1880.

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York Mar. 1, 1879.

DEAR SENTINEL:

In modern business where tangible hard cash plays a comparatively small part in effecting the vast daily exchanges of property, the use of credits is of paramount importance to the business world. It is only enough to say that the thing is to get the pay for them, may almost be said to have passed into a commercial proverb. And well may it be so regarded, for statistics show that more than 80 per cent of all legitimate balances in trade result from bad debts. A man cannot know everybody, and yet, in most cases, he has got to be ready to deal with everybody if he would not fall hopelessly behind in the commercial race. In view of these facts, it is hardly necessary to emerge on the subject of anything which tends to aid the merchant or manufacturer in this so-nearly complicated matter of granting credit.

The one great instrumentality to this end, and the only one that is both comprehensive and effective, is the Mercantile Agency system, one of the latest developments of universal necessity which grew with the growth of the country, and which has in this country reached a development of which I very much to say not one in ten of the Home readers who avail themselves of it have any adequate idea. I confess that I myself was most ignorant on the subject when I supposed until a few days ago, when I improved an opportunity which presented itself to look through the New York office of the Bradstreet Company, and witness the workings of its vast machinery. Bradstreet's, which I believe is now the foremost Mercantile Agency in the world, was founded just thirty years ago, by J. M. Bradstreet, who, with his son, conducted it for many years. In 1876, the founder died and his successor about retiring, the business was incorporated under the name of the Bradstreet Company, with the presidency of Mr. Chas. F. Clark, who has been for more than twenty years associated with the concern. With regard to the improvements which in this establishment has gradually introduced into its system, I shall say something further on, but by-and-by. I think it may interest your readers to give a brief general outline of the institution.

To begin with, Bradstreet's differs from all other Agencies in being a single, wide-spreading organization, instead of an association of more or less independent concerns in various cities. It maintains thirty-five completely equipped offices on this continent, and one main office in London, England, besides keeping a great number of salaried agents in the smaller cities and towns of the Union, and several correspondents in Continental Europe. All this great network is under the undivided control of the home office in New York. All its employees from Dan to San Francisco, and from Montreal to New Orleans, some twelve hundred in number, receive salaries directly from the company, and are subject to its strict discipline. And right here I will call attention to the fact that this number of employees is something remarkable. There are, indeed, many establishments in the country—factories, business shops, and the like—where more individuals find work, but how many private corporations are there which require the service of a thousand brain workers?

As your readers are of course aware, the labor of this large force in the gathering, collation, revision and distribution of reports on the means and credit of each member of the American and Canadian business community. To give anything like a full account of the methods by which this great work is accomplished, to speak of the tact, skill, perseverance and judgement which the reporters must exercise, the untiring care and watchfulness which must be displayed in noting the changes in each merchant's condition, the overwhelming amount of detail involved in the writing out, registering, mouldifying and transmitting these reports and changes all [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

His wife and a baby, aged two years, were placed out of danger, and he then went up stairs to rescue the rest of the family, but he was overcome by smoke and suffocated. Within five minutes of the discovery of the fire, the building was completely enveloped in flames, and the shouts and cries of the poor victims (seven in number) remaining in the building were heard by the neighbors who had assembled at the fire, but they could not be reached, and the father and three daughters, aged respectively thirteen and ten years, and three sons, aged sixteen, twelve and seven, perished in the flames. IN a letter, published on the 27th ult., William Lloyd Garrison replies to Mr. Hisloe, and attempts to show that the prosecution of the Chinese is akin to the persecution of the negroes in the days of slavery. He denies that the treaty has been violated in the past by China, and denounces the whole anti-Chinese agitation as a development of the spirit of caste, against which, he says, antislavery sentiment has made it the work of their lives to struggle.

THE Democrats and Greenbackers of Michigan held their State Conventions at Lansing, on the 28th, and agreed upon the following nominations: For Supreme Judge, John R. Sharpe. For Regents, Orange H. Sanford and Henry Whiting. The financial plank of the joint platform was as follows: "That money should be issued in sufficient volume to meet the requisites of business; that the Government should regulate the value of money by preserving a uniform ratio between supply and demand, and that this delicate and important power should never be delegated to banks, corporations or individuals."

AN indictment has been found in the United States Circuit Court for the Western District of Virginia, sitting at Danville, against five County Judges in Virginia, on the alleged charge of withholding from negroes the right of serving on juries. On the 28th ult., both houses of the Virginia Legislature adopted resolutions directing the Attorney-General to take proper steps to bring such proceedings before the United States Supreme Court for review and final adjudication. The action of the Federal Court was roundly condemned in the resolutions which were adopted.

ON the night of the 1st, the President sent to the House, where the measure originated, his veto of the bill restricting Chinese immigration. A motion to pass the bill, notwithstanding the objections of the President, was defeated by a vote of 99 yeas to 95 nays—not the requisite two-thirds in the affirmative.

IN the SENATE, on the 24th, the House bill authorizing the Secretary of the Navy to accept, for a corps of exploration by way of Behring's Strait, the ship-rigged barque, owned by J. B. Bennett, was passed. The Army Appropriation bill was further considered and a lengthy debate ensued on the clause in regard to allowing railroads to use their telegraph lines for commercial purposes, several proposed amendments being proposed and one adopted, the clause as amended in the bill reads: "And telegraphs are hereby declared to be subject to all the duties and obligations imposed upon telegraph companies by Title XVII of the Revised Statutes of the United States, so far as the general public use is concerned." The bill, with an appropriation for the payment of arrears of pensions was considered and amended. The Deficiency Civil Appropriation bill was reported, with amendments. Speaker Randall made a personal explanation, in the House, in regard to charges made against him in a letter, written by Benjamin Wade, in 1876. Mr. Randall said Williams, to the effect that he (Randall) was largely interested in the manufacture of fiber paper for the Government, and, after an examination of the matter, he was convinced that the matter be submitted to a special committee for investigation; the committee was ordered, and the Speaker pro tem., (Mr. Carlisle) appointed Messrs. Chandler, Hoskins and Ingalls. Tellers on the part of the House were subsequently appointed on the Pacific Railroad Funding bill, and the Civil Appropriation bill ($16,986,760) was agreed to—21 to 27.

AFTER securing the attendance of a quorum, on the morning of the 25th, the Senate passed the bill to prevent the introduction of contagious or infectious diseases into the United States, and to establish a Bureau of Public Health. After adjournment, the Senate was engaged in considering the Army Appropriation bill when a Conference Committee was appointed on the bill to amend the Interstate Commerce Act, which was submitted, and its reception objected to. Mr. Conkling introduced a Constitutional amendment blacking Congress for the triumphant passage of the bill restricting Chinese immigration. The amendment was agreed to—yeas, 32; nays, 28—less than the two-thirds necessary to carry the proposition. The Army Appropriation bill was further considered, and the question of the appropriation of $100,000 for the relief of the Mississippi sufferers was discussed. The bill was laid on the table—34 to 19. The President's Message vetoing the Chinese Immigration bill was read, and the question as to the passage of the bill, the objections to the veto, was put, and resulted in yeas, 199; nays, 76—less than the necessary two-thirds in the affirmative, and so the bill was rejected. The Senate bill to amend the Act providing for the Electoral Commission, and for other purposes, was passed; yeas, 27; nays, 25. The Army Appropriation bill was further considered, and the Senate adjourned.

THE VETO MESSAGE.

President Hayes, in a Message to the House, Gives His Reasons for Disapproving of the Chinese Immigration Bill.

The following is the full text of the President's Veto Message delivered to the National House of Representatives, on the evening of the 1st:

To the House of Representatives: After very careful consideration of [illegible] Act entitled "An Act to amend an Act entitled 'An Act to regulate the immigration of aliens to the United States,' approved August 3, 1882," which originated in the House of Representatives, on which both Houses of Congress have been in session for more than two months, and which was presented to me on the 29th ultimo, I am compelled to withhold my approval from it, and to return it to the House in which it originated, with my objections to its becoming a law.

The first section of the bill proposes to abrogate a treaty between the United States and China, which was concluded in the year 1880, after full and friendly negotiations conducted on both sides in a spirit of frankness and mutual confidence. The object of the negotiations was to adapt the provisions of the existing treaty between the two countries to the then altered circumstances of the Chinese immigration into the United States. The results of the negotiations are embodied in the treaty of November 17, 1880, which was duly ratified by the two Governments and the ratifications exchanged at Washington on the 5th day of October, 1881. By the first article of this treaty it is declared that "Whenever in the opinion of the Government of China the coming of Chinese laborers to the United States or their residence therein affects or threatens to affect the interests of that country or to endanger the good order of the said country or of any locality within the territory thereof, the Government of China may regulate, limit or suspend such coming or residence, but may not absolutely prohibit it. The limitation or suspension shall be reasonable and shall apply only to such Chinese laborers as may go to the United States as laborers other than those engaged in the following classes, viz: officials, teachers, students, merchants or travelers for curiosity or pleasure, but shall not apply to Chinese laborers who are now in the United States."

Article II declares that "Chinese laborers who are now or who may hereafter become subjects of China shall have full liberty to go at their own pleasure to and from the United States, either for the purpose of trade or as permanent residents. The high contracting parties also agree to extend all rights, privileges, immunities and exemptions in regard to travel or residence which may be enjoyed by the citizens or subjects of the most favored nation, but nothing herein contained shall be held to confer naturalization upon citizens of China in the United States nor upon citizens of the United States in China, nor shall it be held to supersede the power of either country to make such regulations and to enact such laws as may be necessary for the protection of the person and property of foreigners residing within its territory, subject to the provisions of Article I of this treaty."

Article III provides that "The Government of China may appoint consuls at such ports of the United States as trade may require, and the Government of the United States may appoint consuls at such ports in China as trade may require, subject in each case to the laws governing consuls in the country to which they are sent."

The first section of the bill now before me suspends the immigration of Chinese laborers for the period of twenty years, and makes the performance of this treaty stipulation impossible during that time. It is therefore in direct contravention of the express terms of the treaty. How can the Government of China be asked to enter into new treaty stipulations with us when the present treaty is broken by the action of the Congress of the United States? How can the Government of China be asked to negotiate in regard to the particular classes of Chinese laborers to which objection is made, when the present treaty forbids the imposition of any restriction which shall not be reasonable, and which shall not operate to prevent entirely the coming of such laborers to the United States? How can the Government of China be asked to negotiate in regard to the police regulations of the treaty, when the present treaty forbids the imposition of any regulation

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

A FIRE broke out in Reno, Nev., on the morning of the 2d, which entirely consumed the business portion of the town, the flames crossing to spread because there was nothing left for them to feed upon. Every public building was destroyed, including churches, banks, hotels, and the Postoffice, the only entire ones remaining being the Masonic Hall and John Larcomb's house. Five persons are known to have perished in the flames, and many others were severely burned and otherwise injured. Loss, $1,000,000; insurance, $150,000.

A FEW nights ago, at St. Louis, Lizzie Heed used kerosene oil to feed the embers of a relic in her kitchen fire. The usual explosion followed, and the careless woman was set on fire herself. In the same evening, while Mary Ann Jordan was reading by the kitchen table, the lamp standing thereon exploded, and the poor creature was fatally burned.

THE Secretary of the United States Treasury, on the 1st, issued another call for the redemption of 5-20 bonds, principal and interest to be paid on and after dated. The calls for $7,000,000 coupon and $4,000,000 registered—a total of $11,000,000. The Secretary has also issued a circular, giving notice that upon the outstanding 5-20 bonds presented and called for redemption there will be 1 per cent. on the latter will be allowed from the date of purchase, and will bear date April 1, 1879. Purchasers are allowed a commission of one-eighth of 1 per cent. on all purchases from $1 to $1,000,000.

A FEW days ago, the body of a murdered woman was found packed in a trunk in the river at Lynn, Mass. The body was subsequently identified as that of Sarah Gibson. Miss Gibson, who was in Boston, put in an appearance in person and denied that the corpse was hers. Two women from Boston then identified the remains as those of a Miss Fanny McConologue, who was supposed to have gone West. Miss McConologue was subsequently heard from in San Francisco, and of course the corpse could not be hers, and the mystery remained as great as ever.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, is greatly excited over the subject of incendiary fire, of which not less than eight were started simultaneously on the morning of the 8th. Over 800 armed men were sworn in as patrols.

A FLOOD in the region round about Humboldt Bay, Cal., the other day, was very destructive of railroad and telegraph lines, fences, outbuildings and dwellings. Two persons lost their lives, several others were injured and a great deal of stock was drowned.

Personal and Political.

JUDGE WHITAKER, of the Superior District Court of Louisiana, has ruled that the decision of the Supreme Court in the Anderson case is binding also in the case of Wells, Cazanave and Kenner, members of the old Returning Board, and has discharged the accused from arrest under the recently-found indictment.

AT a mass meeting in Hollister, Cal., flags were hoisted at half mast on the recognition of the intelligence that the Chinese bill had been vetoed, and President Hayes was burned in effigy.

THE Workingmen of San Francisco, to the number of 7,000, met on the Sand Lots, on the afternoon of the 2d, to consider the Chinese question. The President was roundly denounced by the speakers, and resolutions adopted to the effect that the bill vetoed by him was a piece of political claptrap which the workingmen would have accepted for what it was worth and asked for more, but they did not consider the veto of sufficient importance to mourn over it, or strike a blow for it.

THE Judiciary Committee of the National House of Representatives have prepared a report declaring that the charges against H. W. Blodgett, Judge of the United States Court for the Northern District of Illinois, are unfounded, but that the inquiry was warranted under the circumstances.

E. P. DOWELL, Chairman of the National committee of the National party, issued an address to the people of the country, on the 6th, in which he declares that the separation from the old parties had inspired the National workers with confidence and zeal, and the poor creature was fatally burned.

THE Secretary of the United States Treasury, on the 1st, issued another call for the redemption of 5-20 bonds, principal and interest to be paid on and after dated. The calls for $7,000,000 coupon and $4,000,000 registered—a total of $11,000,000. The Secretary has also issued a circular, giving notice that upon the outstanding 5-20 bonds presented and called for redemption there will be allowed from the date of purchase

Hereafter, the members of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union of Lansing, Michigan, following a precedent set by the glorious cause of temperance, highly appreciated and commended every good act by the upbraiding of the cause and when they have a meeting to endorse their differing customs are promptly heard, therefore

Resolved, That we severely and heartily condemn the backs to the Hon Zachariah Chandler, United States Senator elect, for his influence in procuring the closing of the Lansing House bar during his senatorial banquet; and we also in hope our next jobs that he may continue his influence at the capitol in the Republic and succeed in closing the keg on our national saloons, and find speed Lansing.

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be presented to the [illegible] for publication.

There are six vacancies in the House—four from California, one from Texas, caused by the death of Schleicher; and one in New York, caused also by a death.—Washington Paper.

The United States Four-Per-Cent. Certificates.

The Secretary of the United States Treasury has issued a circular calling attention to the 4-per-cent. refunding certificates of the United States to be issued under the provisions of the act of Congress approved Feb. 26, 1879, entitled "An act to authorize the issue of certificates of deposit in aid of the refunding of the public debt." A Washington dispatch gives the following particulars:

Each certificate will be of the denomination of $10, will be made nearly of the form and size of the United States note, and will bear on its face and back the conditions of its issue. Such certificates will be sold for lawful money at par and accruing interest to date of purchase, by the Treasurer of the United States at Washington and by the Assistant-Treasurers at Boston, Baltimore, Chicago, New York, Philadelphia, St. Louis and San Francisco, and the Treasurer of the United States at Washington and Assistant-Treasurer at New York will also receive in payment drafts in favor of themselves, respectively, drawn on New York, which will be collected, and the excess, if any, returned to the depositors.

The Secretary of the Treasury will also accept in payment certain certificates of deposit of National Banks specially designated to receive deposits on this account, but the refunding certificates will not be delivered until the certificate of deposit issued by the bank has been paid for by a Treasury draft or by deposit of a like amount with the Treasurer or some Assistant-Treasurer of the United States, or until United States bonds of an equal amount are substituted in their stead.

All National Banks, upon complying with Sec. 5153, Revised Statutes of the United States, are invited to become financial agents of the Government and depositories of public moneys accruing from such certificates. Money received by depository banks for such certificates will remain on deposit with said banks, subject to the order of the Treasurer of the United States, and calls for redemption of bonds will issue from time to time, as the Secretary may direct. All banks, bankers, Postmasters and other public officers, and all other persons are invited to aid in placing these certificates. They can make their arrangements through the National Banks for the deposit of the purchase money. Commissions will be allowed on the purchase of these certificates as follows: On the aggregate of $1,000 and not exceeding $100,000 in any one calendar month, one-eighth of 1 per cent., and any amount exceeding $100,000 in like period a commission of one-fourth of 1 per cent. on the excess, and parties purchasing at one time $1,000 or more of certificates will be entitled to receive them free of charge for transportation.

The certificates will be ready for delivery April 1, 1879, at which date they will begin to bear interest, which will be payable upon the conversion of the certificates into 4-per-cent. bonds.

The Secretary also announces that as soon as practicable 210 certificates will be issued under this law similar in form and upon like similar conditions to those above described, to be registered on the books of the Treasury in the name of the owner, which name will also be entered on the face of the certificate.

The form of the certificate is to be as follows:

UNITED STATES REFUNDING CERTIFICATE. $10. April 1, 1879.

This certifies that the sum of $10 has been deposited with the Treasurer of the United States, subject to the act of Jan. 20, 1870.

JAMES GILFILLAN, Treasurer of the United States.

Register of the Treasury.

Washington, D. C.

Convertible, with accrued interest at 4 per cent. per annum, for 4-per-cent bonds of the United States, issued under the acts of July 14, 1870, and Jan. 20, 1871, upon presentation at the office of the Treasurer of the United States, Washington, in sums of $50 or multiples thereof.

On the back:

Interest on this note will cease as follows: For each nine days, or $1[illegible] part of a month; 1 cent; for each quarter year, 10 cents; for each entire year, 40 cents.

In the Northern oil field of Pennsylvania fuel is scarce. Patent oil-burners have been invented, and in several factories and refineries oil is entirely used for fuel, and coal and wood are abolished.

The Colorado Central Railroad will be supplied with steel rails through the canyons during the summer.

Sketch of the Life of "The Learned Blacksmith."

On the night of the 6th day of March Elihu Burritt, familiarly known as the "Learned Blacksmith," died at New Britain, Conn., about half a mile from the place of his birth. Having come to the light of this world in that humble, rural place, and having gone out from it in the vigor of manhood to make his influence felt in many Nations, it was very fitting that he should come back at old age, like the tired child to his mother, lay down his life, where, more than sixty-eight years ago, he took it up.

Elihu Burritt is, perhaps, more widely known as the "Learned Blacksmith" than by any other appellation, a term descriptive of his vocation and attainments. But the title of Universal Philanthropist would better describe the whole man. The popular mind dwells upon him as poring over grammars and dictionaries, and deciphering strange words in hieroglyphical characters. But few even now among his own countrymen think of him as leading the best minds and the largest-hearted people of the civilized countries into a Congress of Nations to devise means to settle National disputes, and forever end the barbarous practice of international wars.

Elihu Burritt was born in New Britain, Conn., Dec. 8, 1810. He was the youngest son in a family of five sons and five daughters—one sister now resides in Chicago, Mrs. A. J. Sawyer. We may know he is of a Puritan family from the Bible name which his parents gave him. The Elihu of the Bible was one of Job's friends, a true friend, because he rebuked him, and against his self-righteousness, did "speak in God's behalf." The Burritt family came from South Wales to Connecticut in 1631, and in the time of the Revolution, which tried the souls of men, were a divided family; some remaining loyalists removed to Canada; but the branch of Elihu took active with the rebels, and his father and grandfather carried their muskets into the War of Independence.

In the olden time of the Republic, before manufacture became a part of the American system, it was the practice of all heads of families to secure a homestead upon the soil, a little farm or a larger one, as suited their calling; the tailor, the hatter, the blacksmith and the shoemaker having their little farms, on which they labored such days as they could not follow their trades. Elihu Burritt's father was a shoemaker of the olden style, having a small farm, which he tilled, and his shoemaker's shop by the side of his broad kitchen fire-place. Elihu's brother was a blacksmith, and when he is a lecturer before the Boston Mechanics' Institute; Burritt was dubbed the "Learned Blacksmith"—and his letter was seized hold of by some primitive reporter, and published in full in a Boston paper. He went to bed very quietly one night in his humble bedroom, after delving very hard in that old antiquarian library, and awoke next morning to find himself famous. It was all found out at last, like any crime; and the young man was very much chagrined and ashamed, and he said he meditated running away and hiding himself from the world under an assumed name, in some obscure village.

He was now a public man, though continuing to work as a journeyman blacksmith.

In 1844 Mr. Burritt established the Christian Citizen. He also began preaching lay sermons to convicts, and took an active part in church revivals. This he found time to do while pursuing his labors as a blacksmith. It was about this time that the writer, a brother editor, first formed an acquaintance with Elihu Burritt. The latter received him with the "kindest cordiality, welcomed him to his sanctum, and made him at home. He had with him, in connection with the newspaper, a young printer by the name of Thomas Drew. He became his factotum. When he went out to lecture he addressed letters to his substitute, whom he knighted Ezekiel. Thomas Drew was the Ezekiel of the Christian Citizen, and became one of the central objects of attraction. Burritt wrote many charming articles to Ezekiel on all public subjects, and what he says in his travels both at home and abroad.

Many of the latter letters were written during Mr. Burritt's travels in England, where he went speaking in the interest of international comity and peace. When he returned he made a tour of the West, and paid his first visit to Chicago. He had some years before addressed an eloquent letter to the Chicago Mechanics' Institute. He was now preparing for the representation of the West in the World's Peace Congress. Charles Durkee, then a Member of Congress from Wisconsin, was the delegate of that State in the Congress held in Paris in 1850, and Mr. Eastman was the delegate to the Congress at Frankfort from Illinois in 1851—Burritt being the only delegates for those years from the Northwest.

It was on his first visit to England that he wrote the "Pledge of the League of Universal Brotherhood"—a bond of love signed by more people of different Nations than perhaps any other bond of peace.

At the breaking out of the Crimean War Mr. Burritt, feeling that his occupation was gone for the present, returned to this country and took up a work to which he thought he had a special mission. This was the endeavor to heal the bitter strife growing up between North and South on the slavery question, and he issued a publication of "Olive Leaves" to promote "peace and amnesty which he called "North and South," proposing the doctrine of "compensated emancipation."

After this publication Mr. Burritt returned quietly to England, avoiding there, as here, public life. He gave his attention to literary labors, and completing his labors in good words for future reading. Then he made his journeys on foot, commencing with his books on "Walks from Land's End to John O'Groat's." In 1865 he was appointed United States Consular Agent at Birmingham, for the time a lucrative position.

For some years he has been residing at New Britain, with his sister's family, where last week he died. He was engaged in preparing his last works for publication and in writing grammars and lexicons of some of the old languages, and found new relish in the study of hagiography, and carried it daily use a Greek grammar in his hat.

After a while he began work in a brass foundry, casting cow-bells and conjugating Latin and Greek verbs. Then he went upon the road as a commercial traveler, to sell cow-bells, padlocks, etc., and kept the books while him, studying by the way, having a horse very favorable to such exercise, one that could make its own way through the devious woods of New England. He next went into commercial business, doing processes, probably neglecting his books, and was financially ruined in 1836. He now turned to his books again.

He was pretty well acquainted with the Latin, Greek and Hebrew, and also with most of the modern languages of Europe, which he had obtained by the forge, and in the foundry, and in the shop, and tavern, and wayside. And now he had a desire to delve into some quaint old Oriental languages, and, lacking text-books, he conceived that it would be necessary for him to make a trip to Europe for the purpose. With that object in view he started on foot from Worcester with very little money in his pocket, hoping to get passage on a sail vessel as a green sailor before the mast. At Boston he heard of the antiquarian Library at Worcester, where it was supposed he could find the requisite rare old books; and accordingly he retraced his steps to Worcester. Here he first engaged himself as a journeyman blacksmith at a dollar and a half a day, and then sought the privileges of the library, and there, between the hours of work and sleep, he delved in ancient lore, but not in the language he sought, but in the Icelandic Sagas, and the Celtoo-Breton, obsolete lingo. He wrote a letter in the latter language which brought him into notoriety in France.

Wanting some employment by which he could earn something to aid him in his studies, he wrote a letter to a gentleman of Worcester, asking for a work in German to translate, in which he modestly spoke of his acquirements in the languages. This letter fell into the hands of Gov. Everett, and, having found out something more about the writer, he ventilated the whole matter in a lecture before the Boston Mechanics' Institute; Burritt was dubbed the "Learned Blacksmith"—and his letter was seized hold of by some primitive reporter, and published in full in a Boston paper. He went to bed very quietly one night in his humble bedroom, after delving very hard in that old antiquarian library, and awoke next morning to find himself famous. It was all found out at last, like any crime; and the young man was very much chagrined and ashamed, and he said he meditated running away and hiding himself from the world under an assumed name, in some obscure village.

He was now a public man, though continuing to work as a journeyman blacksmith.

In 1844 Mr. Burritt established the Christian Citizen. He also began preaching lay sermons to convicts, and took an active part in church revivals. This he found time to do while pursuing his labors as a blacksmith. It was about this time that the writer, a brother editor, first formed an acquaintance with Elihu Burritt. The latter received him with the "kindest cordiality, welcomed him to his sanctum, and made him at home. He had with him, in connection with the newspaper, a young printer by the name of Thomas Drew. He became his factotum. When he went out to lecture he addressed letters to his substitute, whom he knighted Ezekiel. RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

—Russian dissenters from the Greek Church are now computed at 15,000,000.

—There are now fifteen graduates of the Bangor Theological Seminary doing missionary work in foreign countries.

—The average monthly wages of male teachers in Illinois amount to $54.07; of female teachers, to $30.89.

—"Congregational Methodism" is one of the important sects in Georgia. The organization supports its own newspaper.

—The educational system of New York State annually costs $11,000,000. There are 1,500,000 pupils in the schools, taught by 30,000 teachers.

—A pastoral has been issued by the Episcopalian Bishop of Western Michigan condemning worldly devices for the purpose of raising money for church objects.

—In reducing salaries of teachers and officeholders, there is one good thing about it. If they do not want the position when salaries are reduced, they can resign.

—There are now four Catholic Dioceses vacant in the United States—Chicago, Hartford, Marquette and Columbus. And if the resignation of Bishop Borgess, of Detroit, is accepted, it will make the fifth.

—A movement is understood to be on foot in New York to establish here a university for women, and large figure work would be directed toward the elevation of their race in the South. It is reported that $250,000 have already been pledged for its support.—N. Y. Independent.

—The Council of the Evangelical Alliance announces that it is now definitely settled that the next, which will be the seventh, General Conference of Christians of all Nations will be held during the present year at Basle, Switzerland, beginning on Aug. 31, and continuing until Sept. 7.

—Dr. Samuel Eliot, Superintendent of the Public Schools of Boston, says: "Physical pain, or the fear of it, nothing, in fact, that is itself no motive, can be made to seem to many a necessity in school. Only duty, only the love of duty, only a motive, and one leading to other motives, can be called a necessary part of education. Here, positive, not negative, forces are essential."

—A gentleman who has recently visited London tells of the remarkable influence of the Christian life in that country from the popular singing of the Moody and Sankey hymns. The same story comes from other countries in Europe and elsewhere. This modern American Sunday-School music, so much criticised and sneered at, has already taken hold on the popular heart of the masses, Great Britain, Germany, Italy, Sweden, China, India, and the Islands of the Sea, such as no other music has had since the days of Jubal.—Chicago Tribune.

Spring Poetry—A Word of Advice.

There need be no doubt in the mind of any reader of the Free Press that it is eager to secure odes to spring, idyls on April, poems on May and blank verse on green grass and budding vines. In fact, we keep a traveling man out all the year 'round looking after such things, and paying cash down in every case. The trouble is to get enough of such poetry to supply the demands of our readers. Having said this much in explanation, we call the attention of the public to the following solemn facts:

In December, 1860, a lady in Kansas forwarded us a poem on spring, to be laid away under a brick until the 20th of March, she died within fourteen days after mailing the poetry. Comment is needless.

In March, 1867, a student at Ann Arbor forwarded a poem of forty lines on the return of the robin. Before his robin had uttered three squawks, or the poem could be printed, the student was called home to see his sister die. Does any explanation seem necessary?

In 1873 a lady in Elmira, N. Y., sent on eight verses of beautiful poetry on "April Showers." About the time the letter-carrier was saying that there was six cents postage due on her letter she was falling on a bridge near her home. She never spoke after being pulled ashore and wrung out. Truly, the ways of Providence are mysterious.

Last year a lawyer in Cleveland sent us a pound and a half of blank verse on the voice of the blue bird and the starting grass. His verses reached us one rainy Thursday evening, when all Nature seemed bent on having a good old cry, and the voices of ward politicians came up from the Sixth Ward with hollow moan, and next morning the lawyer was found dead in his bed. The terrible look on his face showed that he must have suffered for hours and hours. The Coroner's Jury returned a verdict that the Free Press must be held blameless.

One short week ago a young lady of Western Michigan mailed us a beautiful ode to dying winter. The old man who buys all the waste-paper from this office had scarcely made an offer of a cent and a half per pound for the beautiful ode when a dirty-handed, arrived saying that the poor girl had been tossed on the horns of a cow and had gone to join the angels.

As stated at first, the Free Press is eagerly searching for spring poetry, and offering more pay than any other publication in this country, but it must be explicitly understood that we cannot be held responsible for the sudden death of the writers.—Detroit Free Press.

How Careless Men Can Be With Money.

My friend was paymaster of a large railroad company, and one day he went out with $30,000 to pay the men. The money was wrapped up in an old newspaper, and he carried it under his arm. He stopped at a wayside hostelry for dinner, and left the money on a chair when he went out. He had not gone many miles from the place when he missed it. He flew back and asked the woman if she had seen a parcel. "There's a bit of newspaper on the chair beyond," said she: "perhaps that's it." which it proved to be, and my friend rejoined a happier and a wiser man. Another circumstance: a man I know of lost a roll of bills amounting to $10,000. They, also, were tied up in a newspaper. He told a friend, and the two talked over the loss and the probability of finding the money. The friend made him tell all the ground he had been over since he had the money. The last place he was at was the Postoffice. The night was wet overhead and slushy under foot. They stopped at the Postoffice, and, going to the place where the mail had been, found two or three torn bits of newspaper. It was the same. They searched further, and found the rest of the treasure. It had been kicked in turn by every one who came into the office, and when found was all mired and completely soaked in slush. They seized it eagerly and returned to their hotel, where they spent several hours in cleaning it. It was all there, and, at last they got it dried. The grateful man took his friend out and bought him the handsomest gold watch-chain he could find.—Cor. Boston Gazette.

—The Churchman condemns the practice of allowing and encouraging children to appear in tableaux, etc., upon a public stage, late at night, at entertainments for religious and benevolent objects. It says that the physical injury thus done to the children is great and inexcusable, but that the moral wrong is deeper and graver.

THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, MAR. 25, - 1879

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

CLIPPINGS.

Jefferson Davis is believed by the Rochester Herald to be the peer of Washington—George Washington, of Louisville, who was hanged last week.

The best church choir in Washington is the colored one of St. Luke's Protestant Episcopal Church, of which the Rev. Byron Johns, Selkirk, is the rector.

The presents made to General Grant in his approach have been intended to encourage friends in Pennsylvania, and on a visit to a loan exhibition closing in Pittsburg.

Railroad building has been almost at a standstill since the panic, but from all indications there will be not less than 20,000 miles laid in the south and west during the coming season.

A school teacher in Fond du Lac, Wis., was fined $25 the other day by a justice of the peace for cruelly chastising a bright yearold pupil who failed to work a problem in fractions.

If there is a man in the bounds of the Confederacy who has ever served a higher office and come down a flatter score than Jefferson Davis," the Memphis Avalanche wants to know it.

Queen Victoria is really anxious to see Cleveland and the United States, and the Prince of Wales, remembering what a high time he had here some twenty years ago, is urging here to come.

The newly married Duke of Connaught was allowed $75,000 a year, expects a marriage allowance of $50,000, and when he becomes Viceroy of Ireland, will have $10,000 a year additional.

Judge—"Your client had better make a confession, ask for what she will take." Old Woman—"I'm obliged to his lord-ship (courtesy,) as he's so kind forever; I'll just take a glass o' wather."

Washington dispatches say that Senator Chandler's Speech on Jeff. Davis is most in demand of any speech of the last session of Congress. One hundred thousand copies have already been ordered.

Senator Chandler is a brave, faithful statesman, and would make a magnificent President. Here is this for 1880? For President, Zach Chandler of Michigan; for Vice President, Hannibal Hamlin, of Maine.—Concord, N. H. Monitor.

The tendency of the Republican party is always in the return of Gladiator, Logan Chandler, Carpenter, and others like them to the Senate. The tendency of the Democratic party is shown in the fact that its leaders and representatives men appear as the eulogists of Jeff. Davis.—Chicago Inter Ocean.

The Wendell Phillips Club of Boston has resolved, that it is "encouraged with new hope for the cause of human rights and the liberties of our brethren in the south, by the manly and outspoken remarks of the Hon. Z. Chandler lately made in the Senate of the United States."

Tax passage by the House at Lansing of the bill reducing the oil test to 150 degrees still evidently meets the demand of public opinion. The increased safety of the high test oil is not regarded by the people as an offset for its increased costs, and the preponderance of the argument is unquestionably on the side of reduction.

Pope Leo XIII. has ordered a general jubilee of the Catholic church, to celebrate the anniversary of his elevation to the Papacy. The jubilee season began last Sunday, March 2, and will continue until Pentecost Sunday, June 1. This proclamation is in accordance with an old established custom, each succeeding pope waiting for one year after his election, when, if some time has elapsed since a previous general jubilee, he declares a season of indulgences through out the entire Catholic world. The present is what is known as a special jubilee, the regular grand jubilee taking place every 25 years, and the last having occurred in 1875.

That Speech.

NEW YORK TRIBUNE, Extra—Iowa.

Senator Chandler's great speech continues to be the topic of conversation in all circles here. Happening to have around the people as nothing else has to do the fact that the old rebel element represented by Jefferson Davis are rapidly regaining control of the Government, and, unless arrested, will soon exercise the power and supremacy which they lost by going into the rebellion. For years certain papers have endeavored to convey the impression that Mr. Chandler was a rough specimen of humanity, who represented the worst element of the Republican party. The sentiment was in the Republican party who have been deserving such brave men as Senator Chandler will now have to go to the rear, where they have always belonged. They and the men whom they endeavored to make leaders have given the evidence of what the Republican party and the country would experience under their management.

The following article from the Okolona Mississippi, Southern States of Wednesday, March 12, 1879, we copy verbatim, headings and all, as a particularly candid specimen of Southern Democratic temper

YES, THANK GOD!

We Have Captured the Capitol.

After a struggle of eighteen years in war and politics, the Confederates have at last captured the Capitol.—Washington Republican.

Yes, thank God! we have captured the Capitol, and in 1880 our man will walk up the White House steps and take his seat in the Presidential chair.

Then will our glorious triumph be complete.

Then will we proceed to tear your Amendments from the Constitution and trample them in the mire.

Then will we break the shackly yoke we have forged for the Free Sovereign and Independent Commonwealths of the Union.

Then will we recognize the right of secession—a right that is not dead but sleeping.

Then will we decorate the Capitol with the pictures of Davis, and Lee, and Stuart, and all the glorious leaders of a Cause that is not lost but living still.

Yes, thank God! we HAVE cap-tured the Capitol, and from that eagle of vantage we propose to rule the Republic in a way that will make your Radical ears and your Radical leaders forever odious in America.

The Washington Post (Democratic organ,) of Wednesday morning last, also used the following as the Democratic program for the extra session.

The popular plan among the Democrats of the House, as expressed by those in the city, is the old one of keeping appropriations alive. The Legislative, executive and judicial bills will be rejected and disposed of promptly, just as it passed the House. As a very prominent member expressed it yesterday, "not an amendment will be dotted or a t crossed." It would go to the Senate and be passed there with as little delay as possible. Meantime the House will do nothing—not even the army appropriation bill will be touched until it is seen what Hayes proposes to do. If he sees fit to approve the legislative bill, then the army bill will be passed as quick as possible, and Congress will immediately adjourn. Should Hayes veto the legislative bill, then the Democrats of Congress will consider that no time need be wasted in fooling with him, and they will adjourn at once. If Hayes sees fit to call another extra session, it will convene, and enact the same programme over again, and even again, if necessary. The Democrats will not yield an inch, and are willing for Hayes to try the experiment of running the government without money if he wants to.

It will be difficult to get the House and Senate to adhere to any such plan. If five or six Democratic Senators should vote against adjournment, the plan would break down. Or if a few Democrats in the House should vote with the Republicans against adjourning without passing the necessary appropriation bills, the plan would break down. In short, this plan will not work unless every Democratic vote can be relied upon to back it at all hazards, which is not probable.

"A Classic in Its Way."

From Truth For The People.

That little speech of Zach Chandler's, in the Senate, the other day, on the proposition to punish Jeff. Davis, will go into the declamation books, and boys will be spouting it for a century to come. It is quite a classic in its way. As a consequence of the speech, they are talking about Mr. Chandler for President, and the talk is becoming serious.

Michigan Gold and Silver.

It is needless for seekers after gold to pack their carpet sacks and hie away to the mines of California, Colorado or the inland silvers from the copper Peninsula announce the discovery of important deposits in the Marquette range, about 35 miles west of Escanaba. The Iron Port says that last summer Dr. Boutet from mine, owned by Judge E. S. Ingalls, Thomas A. Bailey Brown, was opened. The ore is a rich hematite of all shades of color. Some time ago the ores became contorted that there were other minerals mixed with the iron, and had experimented on it a little themselves but without obtaining any satisfactory results. Analysis of the ore had been made by different experts, and in each case a large percentage of residue was left without ascertaining what its constituents were. Last week Thomas Breen took three samples of the ores—one of the yellow, one of the iron, and one of the ledge—at Chicago, and had assays made of each sample at the works of the Cut ago Refining Company and was astonished to find that the yellow ore assayed $6.19 in gold and $2.75 in silver to the ton, the hard brown ore $4.12 gold and $10.50 silver to the ton; and the blue ore $9.35 gold and $19.05 silver to the ton. The excitement on account of this discovery is very great in the Escanaba region. A like town started in the Peninsula. Mr. J. J. Hegeman, of Milwaukee, thinks that the quality of precious metals in the ore will not pay, but others believe it will, and progress to test it. They hope, too, to find richer veins of the precious metals in their vicinity. Grand Rapids Eagle.

Mrs. Carpenter is quoted as saying that "if the extra session lasts thirty days it will prove the ruin of the Democratic party." The Peoria Transcript appears to agree with Senator Carpenter on that point, for it remarks, with great force: "Gentlemen! the doom of the Democracy is seated in this extra session. Mark what we say."

The Ann Arbor Democrat has a blood curdling story of the new courthouse in Ann Arbor, which represents that new and costly office in the light of a horrible castle, with all its exercises of torture, while inland phantoms, evil fays, ghosts, supernatural whispers, and mysterious lessons. A little town like Ann Arbor, of 8,000 or over 12,000 students, is thought to be well provided with ghosts.

The Lansing Republican says: "When the Democratic party chose its Senators in joint convention on the 18th inst. but two together—Stockbridge and Lone man who has always been a Republican to a Democrat will pitch the lady directly in with all Democrats into the Democratic movement, and when the platform is announced to maintain it of intelligent and influential Democrats, the hope of success must be faint for the enlightenment."

An Astonishing Fact.

Alarge proportion of the American people are to-day dying from the effects of Dyspepsia or disordered liver. The result of these diseases upon the masses of intelligent and valuable people is most alarming, making life actually a burden instead of a pleasant experience of enjoyment and usefulness as it ought to be. There is no good reason for this, if you will once throw aside prejudice and skepticism, take the advice of your Druggist, Geo. W. CARTER, and your friends, and try one bottle of Green's August Flower. Your speedy relief is certain. Multitudes of bottles of this medicine have been given away in its virtues, with satisfactory results in every case. You can buy a Sample Bottle for 10 cents to try. Three doses will relieve the worst case. Positively used by all Druggists on the Western Continent.

ON the 12th, during the progress of the great pedestrian contest in New York, which began on the night of the 9th, between O'Leary (the champion), Rowell of England, Harriman of Boston, and Ennis of Chicago, O'Leary utterly collapsed and broke down and was ordered from the track by his physicians, and was immediately removed. So completely was he used up that it was thought very doubtful whether he would ever walk again in a pedestrian match. The score stood as follows a short time before O'Leary's withdrawal: Rowell, 246 miles; Harriman, 234; Ennis, 221; O'Leary, 214. Rumors that O'Leary had been drinking, that he had been poisoned, etc., were denied by his physicians, who say that his failure to keep the track was simply because he was used up. Some accounts say his withdrawal was evidently the result of drinking and a general disregard of training rules. On the night of the 12th, a portion of the gallery in the building in which the contest was going on gave way and suddenly sank with a mass of struggling persons who had crowded into it. A panic ensued, and the scene that followed was a frightful one. Many persons were injured, some seriously. The pedestrians continued their walking as soon as the debris was cleared from the track.

A large Republican mass meeting was held in San Francisco, on the evening of the same day, at which the sentiment was indorsed that, while crediting the President with honesty in vetoing the Chinese bill, he acting did not represent the views of the Republican party in California, and the party declined all responsibility therefor.

The Lamentable End of a Fox Chase.

Some frivolous people at Allentown, Pa., the other day, undertook to make the amusing sport of fox-chasing odious. Profiting by the unfortunate experience of some of the New York sportsmen who turned their foxes loose and were never able to find them again, the Allentown sportsmen led the animal over a trail and then secured him for future use. The hounds were then turned out and for some time followed the trail beautifully, but at the very moment when the chase seemed to promise a most successful conclusion the pack became confused and went off in the most unaccountable directions, as if twenty foxes had divided at that point and gone twenty different ways. When this remarkable thing had been investigated it was found that somebody, not understanding the sublime character of the fox-chase, had dragged an odorous and detestable muskrat over the trail and at the critical point had broken into a whole lot of trails, so that each hound could have one all to himself. The muskrat trail is not a new idea, but its successful introduction on this occasion suggests a new and economical thing for sportsmen. The muskrat is considerably cheaper than the fox, and not by any means as likely to get away when turned loose. Let our gallant sportsmen try a muskrat chase. —Philadelphia Times.

Closing Day of the Great Pedestrian Contest.

NEW YORK, March 15.

The last night of the great pedestrian contest squaled, indeed exceeded, the opening night in point of both numbers and enthusiasm. At seven o'clock fully 7,000 people were present, as the pedestrians were encouraged by the most hearty applause. Ladies waved their handkerchiefs, and threw several bouquets at the contestants as they passed along, and men threw their hats in the air, and yelled themselves hoarse. The excitement was something tremendous. Early in the afternoon it was conceded that Rowell would take the belt. Interest was then centered upon Harriman making the 450 miles necessary to secure a share of the gate money. Harriman walked very lame, and appeared to suffer great pain, but he struggled along, gamely and steadily, toward the goal. Ennis was in fine form during the evening, and made some very quick miles. He was quite fresh, and entirely free from lameness. He made spurt after spurt, both running and walking, and the applause that greeted him was immense. About 6:30 this afternoon Rowell, Harriman and Ennis were all on the track together, and Rowell, overtaking Harriman, linked his arm in that walked around, talking with him. The cheering was loud when Ennis came along and linked with Harriman on the other side, applause burst forth in a deafening roar. They marched around arm in arm, and dozens of bouquets were hurled at them. The judges declared that two laps were taken from the score of each man for having received support while going around on the track. Ennis completed his 450th mile at 4:23:26, his 460th mile at 5:38:45, and his 465th at 5:52:15. He then let the track at 5:39:20 and returned at 6:23:55, and left again at 7:33 for a short rest. Harriman finished his 435th mile at 3:52:40, and his 440th mile at 4:47:55, and his 445th mile at 7:31:22. It then became certain that he would turn his 450 miles and earn his share of the gate money. He left the track at 4:48:30, took a good rest until 6:44, when he again appeared. He had evidently more friends in the building than any other two. Rowell finished his 435th mile at 4:12:17, and kept on walking and running alternately, finishing his 485th mile at 5:13:44. He had completed his 500th mile, and had completed the task allotted him. As Harriman neared his 450th mile, and Rowell was closing up to his 500th, the spectators became quite wild with excitement, and, as Harriman turned his 450th mile, and great white figures on the blackboard announced the result, a storm of applause rolling from board burst forth, and lasted fully ten minutes. He completed his 455 miles at 8:42, and a man had to run in front of him before him several immense bouquets, presented by his lady friends. He carried a small package in his hand over his shoulder, and this incident increased, if it were possible, the enthusiasm.

When the figures 500 went up opposite Rowell's name on the blackboard the excitement can scarcely be described. This was three minutes to nine o'clock. He then left on his mister and carrying the American flag over his right shoulder and an immense bouquet in his left hand, he marched around the track twice, a Captain of police on one side and his trainer on the other. The band played "God Save the Queen." The enthusiasm ran high. Rowell then left the track at 9:03, and with a spurt of 880 miles. He went at once to the Ashland House, was bathed and rubbed down, and went to bed for four hours, when he is to be waked up. He was received at the hotel by some twenty ladies and congratulated. He seemed to be a pretty well used-up man.

Harriman completed 450 miles and 3 laps at 8:45:40, and then he retired from the track for good. He was surrounded by a host of friends, who brought him out of the garden by the fourth avenue entrance and placed him in a carriage, and he was driven to the St. James Hotel. He was accompanied by his doctor. Various floral gifts given to Rowell and Harriman were taken to their hotels after the contest. Ennis alone remained on the track, and he was walking in a bet of $1,500. He had backed himself to win it. He was cheered lustily. The crowd remaining notwithstanding it was generally known that both Rowell and Harriman had left the garden. Ennis continued at a good pace and turned his 470th mile at 8:53:25 and completed 475 miles at 10:57. The applause was tremendous. Ennis running his 475th mile in 6 minutes and 55 seconds, the fastest of the contest.

This concluded the great walking match, and the vast crowd slowly dispersed. The official score for the match at ten o'clock, when it closed, was: Rowell, 500 miles and 180 yards; Ennis, 475 miles; Harriman, 450 miles 3 laps and 140 yards. The men were off the track during the whole six days as follows: Rowell, 38 hours 42 minutes and 50 seconds; Ennis, 36 hours 21 minutes and 33 seconds; Harriman, 34 hours 1 minute and 21 seconds. The total receipts during the contest were $51,000. At the beginning of the match it was decided that $1,000 should be set apart out of the receipts for the man or men who failed to cover 460 miles. O'Leary thus will receive $1,000.

At half-past ten the lights in the main building of the garden were turned out, and the great international pedestrian contest for the championship of the world was settled for the present.

The total number of miles made by each man on each day of the match was as follows:

	Rowell.	Ennis.	Harriman.
First day	110	93	100
Second day	80	73	70
Third day	81	73	70
Fourth day	80	73	70
Fifth day	66	69	65
Sixth day	73	69	65
Total	500	475	450

—In a recent series of demonstrations at La Salpetriere, Paris, Prof. Charcot has shown, inter alia, that it is possible to produce in one subject a state of catalepsy on one side of the body and a simultaneous state of lethargy on the other. The patient is first thrown into catalepsy by looking at the electric light (in this state the pupils are supple, and will retain any position one chooses to give them). To produce the state of lethargy or somnambulism on one side, it is sufficient to close the corresponding eye, or shut off the light with a screen; the two states are then coexistent on the two sides of the body.

—It is now proposed, by means of an invention recently brought forward, as described in the American Manufacturer, to drill oil wells without a derrick, to pump the sand out without removing the drill, and to test and pump the well, after it is completed, without removing the tubing. The drill employed is a hollow pipe, and is studded with diamonds, these latter obviating the necessity of removing the drill to sharpen the tools, as is the case with steel drills. It works with a rotary movement, instead of with the jarring motion of the drills now in use, and this is considered a decided improvement. The pipe being filled with the sand pipe runs inside of it, and, when the well is completed, the pipe is used for tubing, the oil being pumped through it.

—According to the most recent submarine investigations, the average depth of the ocean is 12,000 fathoms, and it nowhere exceeds 5,000; within 200 or 400 miles of the shore formations are being formed over the bottom, derived mainly from the disintegration of shore rocks, but in the abyssal regions the sounding instruments bring up an extremely fine reddish clay, in great part amorphous, but containing, when examined under the microscope, a quantity of distinctly recognizable particles, both mineral and organic. The organic particles are chiefly siliceous; the inorganic are minute flakes of disintegrated pumice, and small crystalline fragments of volcanic minerals; and the amorphous residue is thought to be due, principally to the decomposition of volcanic products, and partly to the ultimate inorganic residue of decomposed organisms. There is ample evidence that this abyssal deposit is taking place with extreme slowness, and, so far as is known, the deposit thus being formed at extreme depths in the ocean does not correspond, either in structure or chemical composition, with any known geological formation.—*N. WHICH WAY?

Children, stop your play,
And tell me which way
I shall take to reach the city on the hill.
First baby said, with a smile,
With a smile:
"This way."
Through the woods, across the stile,
By a brook where wild roses grow,
Where the birds sing sweet and low:
Then you forget it was so far,
And how tired are you are,
For the rain rests you, makes you still,
You take this way to the city on the hill."

Then the lad,
With a frown,
This way."
By the mill and through the town—
You will see the soldiers there,
Hear the drums and pass the fair;
Then you forget the way is long
While you walk in the throng,
For the music wakes you, makes you thrill,
When you go this way to the city on the hill."

LET IT PASS.

He not swift to take offense;
Anger is a foe to sense;
Let it pass!
Brood not darkly o'er a wrong
Which will disappear ere long;
Hether sing this cheery song:
Let it pass!
Let it pass!

Strife corrodes the purest mind;
As the unregarded wind,
Let it pass!
Any vulgar words that live
May embitter a friend forever;
To the noble who forgive,
Let it pass!
Let it pass!

Rouse not anger to depart,
Let it pass!
Lay the "law" with words to heart,
Let it pass!
Follow not the guilty throng;
Better to be wronged than wrong;
Therefore sing the cheery song:
Let it pass!
Let it pass!

THE SEVERED HAND.

About the end of January, more than twenty years since, Dr. Lisfranc, a celebrated surgeon, of whom I was a pupil, to his house at eleven o'clock at night. He had reached his door, and had raised the knocker, when he heard a voice, ing to the maid in attendance of his arrival, when a vigorous arm stopped his own half way, and at the same time three masked figures surrounded him astonished doctor. The street was deserted, the door had no arms by him, and, wisely judging that resistance would prove unavailing, he sought to escape from the hands of the banditti by the sacrifice of his purse, when the man who held his arm addressed him in a very politely, saying:

"I believe you are Dr. Lisfranc?"

"You seem to be acquainted with my person," replied the doctor. "Take, then, my purse and watch—trouble me not longer, but get you gone to more honest work."

"Sir," said the man, haughtily, "we are no thieves, but only come to ask from you a favor."

"You have chosen a strange way and an unusual hour for such a purpose," said the doctor, mistrustfully.

"Every hour is good for so clever a surgeon as yourself to perform an operation."

"Eh?" said the doctor, who, a little reassured, was examining his three clients more closely, and perceived that they were dressed more like gentlemen going to a ball than like highway robbers.

"We request, doctor, that you follow us immediately."

"Permit me at least to warn my lady of my absence."

"No—there is no need for it. You have your implements with you, that will do. You must submit, however, to having your eyes bandaged."

"But, sir—"

"Come, come, by George," said one of the men, "if you have so many words about it, we shall never proceed." He then sounded a shrill whistle, and a carriage coming from a narrow street in the neighborhood made its appearance. The three men led the doctor to it, helped him up, and then got in after him. The horses galloped away at a rapid pace.

Dr. Lisfranc did not even think of offering a resistance, which must prove useless, but examined with a good grace to the mysterious violence exercised upon his person.

For two hours' time not a word was exchanged between him and his traveling companions, who spoke among themselves in a language he could not understand.

At length the carriage rolled beneath a portico—the noise of an opening gate was heard, crushing on its hinges—the carriage stopped.

The door was opened and the steps let down.

"Well?" inquired an anxious voice.

"He is here," replied one of the men in the carriage, and, taking the doctor by the hand, assisted him to alight. They then caused him to ascend several steps.

By the cold air that struck upon his face the doctor perceived that he was on the steps of an outer portico. A door was opened, and the doctor fancied they made him cross a large hall; he was then led through a suite of apartments covered with soft carpeting. At last the doctor's guide paused and said:

"We have reached our destination, doctor—remove your bandage."

The doctor, whose terror had changed to an uneasy curiosity and a vague apprehension, obeyed the stranger's voice and found himself in a small room, luxuriously furnished, and but half lit by an alabaster lamp which hung in the middle of the room. The window curtains were closely shut, as well as those of the alcove, which occupied the further end of the apartment. In this room the doctor found himself along with one of the three individuals who had made him an unwilling captive.

The stranger was tall and of imposing mien. He was dressed with a truly aristocratical precision; his black eyes glittered through the half mask that covered his upper features, while a nervous twitch agitated his uncovered lips and the thick beard that surrounded the lower part of his face.

"Doctor," said the stranger, in a dry and broken voice, "prepare your implements—you have to perform an amputation."

"Where is the patient?" inquired Lisfranc, saying which he turned toward the alcove, and moved a step forward. The curtains waved gently, and a sighing was heard coming from that direction.

"Prepare for the operation, sir," repeated the stranger, convulsively.

"But," said the doctor, "it is important that I should see the patient."

"You can see only the hand which you are required to cut off."

The doctor then crossed his arms, and, looking earnestly at his interlocutor, replied:

"Sir, there has been violence used in bringing me here: if it be true, however, that some one stands in need of my services, without looking into your secrets—mumindful of the way I have been brought here—I shall willingly do my duty as a surgeon; but if a crime is meditated a crime, you may have obliged me to follow you, but you cannot force me to become your accomplice."

"Be easy, sir," replied the stranger, bitterly; "your services are useless all this." And taking the doctor by the arm, he walked up to the alcove; then pointing to a hand that hung from behind the curtains, he said: "That is the hand you are to cut off."

The doctor took within his own the extended hand; he felt its delicate fingers shudder at the contact. It was a woman's hand, small and beautifully shaped, with the nails as rosy and as whiteness appear still more remarkable.

"Nothing here," exclaimed the doctor; "no, nothing demands an amputation."

"And I tell you," cried the stranger, with a thundering voice, "that, if the surgeon refuses, I shall fulfill his office myself," and, seizing an ax that lay at the foot of the bed, he laid the hand on the night table and prepared to sever it.

The doctor held him back.

"Then do it yourself," said the man. "But this is an atrocious deed!" cried poor Lisfranc.

"This is nothing to you. It must be done; I will it so. The lady wishes it like that. If she wish not, I am sure she will do it. Come, madam, request the doctor to do you the favor."

Poor Lisfranc, pale and trembling, felt ready to faint on the floor. A feeble voice came from the alcove, and said, in a tone of unutterable despair and resignation:

"Since you are a surgeon, sir—yes, I entreat you—do it be yourself—and do not fear. Monsieur, you are sure of my secrecy's sake!"

"Come, doctor," said the unknown; "either you or I."

So fierce and terrible was the aspect of the stranger, and so implacable and relentless his determination—the prayer of the poor lady, so poignant and despairing, that the doctor felt impelled by humanity itself to obey the command.

He took his implements, implored with a last look that he feared the stranger, who uncivilly replied by pointing significantly to the ax.

With a broken spirit, and a cold perspiration bathing his noble brow, the doctor recalled all his energy and presence of mind. Twice his arm trembled and he paused. At length the blood spouted forth—a shriek burst from the alcove, and to that cry of agony succeeded a dead silence.

The stranger stood by, apparently unmoved. Nothing was heard but the noise of the horrible work. Soon the hand and the instrument fell together. The doctor, livid and exhausted, gazed upon the stranger with haggard eyes. The latter stooped, picked up the severed hand, and, drawing the ruby ring from off one of the fingers, presented it to the doctor.

"Take it, doctor," said he; "it is a souvenir no one will claim it from you." He then added in a low voice, "It is over!"

Immediately the other two masked men came in, and, bandaging his eyes, again led him away. The same carriage that had brought him there set him down again at his own door. Dr. Lisfranc snatched the bandage from his eyes in time to see the carriage rolling away and disappearing in the darkness. It was five o'clock in the morning.

It was in vain that day after day the doctor exhausted every means he could imagine for penetrating the mystery of this terrible adventure. Had it not been for the ring (indisputable proof of the reality of his recollections), he would have thought himself a prey to an hallucination.

Hoping, however, that the ruby ring would sooner or later lead to some revelations of this mysterious affair, he was in the habit of wearing it suspended to his watch-chain.

About two months after the events just recorded, Dr. Lisfranc received an invitation for a ball given by the Countess de P——, in her magnificent mansion in the Rue de Varennes, Paris. He accordingly went.

All the fashion and elite of the French nobility, as well as the most illustrious personages of German diplomacy, thronged the saloons, which were radiant with light and beauty.

A young man, with a pale face and melancholy eye, had been, during the evening, the object of particular remark by many of the guests. He walked, from time to time, through the suites of apartments, with an anxious look, and then, with a sorrowful demeanor, separated from the crowd.

It so happened that the young man found himself, for an instant, opposite to Dr. Lisfranc. His eyes mechanically falling upon the doctor, soon assumed an earnest stare, then glittered with a tearful expression on the ring that glistened on his finger. With a sudden and rapid movement the young man passed through a group that separated him from the doctor, walking up to him, elbowed him rudely and intentionally. The doctor politely remonstrated; but, instead of answering, the young man struck him repeatedly in the face.

It may be easily conceived what excitement and consternation this scene produced.

The next day was appointed for a meeting, at the same company soon after dispersed in confusion.

The young Matilda de —— (the names are too illustrious and too well known for us to point them out, even by initials), the young Matilda de —— was the daughter of one of the most illustrious soldiers of the Empire. Her father had acquired an elevated rank, great glory and a high station in the army; but he was one of the few Generals whom the Emperor had not enriched. Matilda was, therefore, no fortune to bestow upon the one who should call her his.

Matilda was—was the grandson of the noble Duchess de ——. The Duchess had a great name, an empty title, but no fortune.

Notwithstanding this, the Duchess and the General, long bound together by the ties of friendship, had mutually agreed to unite the two children in marriage.

Of this determination, however, they soon apprised Matilda and Napoleon gave themselves up to the fascinating charm of their mutual affection, the General, General, alarmed for the interest of their children, and a little, also, for their own, played a scene of high comedy.

"If my daughter," says the General, "marries that poor devil, Napoleon, adieu to luxury and pleasure."

"If my son," interrupted the Duchess, "should wed a girl and not a fortune, how could we ever restore the lustre of the noble house of ——?"

The General, therefore, sought to wean Matilda from her lover, and the Duchess exerted herself to divert Napoleon from thinking of Matilda. But neither could succeed. Napoleon and Matilda loved too sincerely, too devotedly, to fail an easy prey to the snares spread out to trap their youth and inexperience.

Unable to dissuade them, the General and the Duchess insisted upon the departure of Napoleon, and on his absenting himself for a while from Paris. He told him that the happiness of their fortune demanded it. It was indispensable for him to acquire a position in the world. The Minister had just offered to provide him with a place as Secretary to some foreign Embassy. Should he refuse to go he would shut out himself from a brilliant career. He must accomplish this sacrifice, were it but for Matilda's sake; as her future welfare depended upon his, and he was to become responsible for her happiness. Napoleon at length unwillingly consented.

He saw Matilda for a last time; he told her of his departure. A cry of agony burst from the young girl's bosom. In vain did Napoleon endeavor to console her by pointing out, in a speedy return, a whole life of love, happiness and wealth. Matilda still remained unconsolable. A dark foreboding prevented her from believing the false promises of an uncertain futurity. What could she gain in exchange for happiness which, at present, was theirs, and which they were about to sacrifice to their duty? She felt that her golden dream was over—that it was fading away from her sight.

Napoleon took her hand in his, and covered it with tears and kisses. "Remember," said he, "remember that then art my betrothed, and that this hand is mine, forever mine."

Saying which he put a ruby ring on her finger.

"It is my mother's," murmured he. Matilda could only answer by pressing the ring to her lips, then fell fainting and desolate upon a couch.

Napoleon departed. His absence facilitated the projects of the parents.

The General then made an appeal to Matilda's devoted heart; he exaggerated his poverty—he invented a tale about debts and engagements which he would not be able to meet; he pointed out to her the horrors which would surround his miserable old age, beggared and dishonored; he even hinted to her that it would be far better to cut short his troubled life. She alone had power to save him—she must forget Napoleon and wed the Count de ——, whose handsome and manly face, whose noble soul she well must know how to appreciate.

A little selfishness and Matilda would have been saved; but it is the weakness of elevated minds not to shrink from sacrifices. Matilda, in despair, threw herself in her father's arms and promised all. He blessed and thanked her for her dev

Fashionable Colors—New Styles in Trimmings—Buttons.

Colors quite new and strange are the Canaque, or cannibal, a succession of copper shades, the name being given from the resemblance to the copper complexion of a tribe of cannibals. Blue is largely brought forward, and appears in many different shades; but, with the exception of the dark marine blues or the palest tints, mixtures of green are often more or less apparent. The most pronounced blue of the season is called sapphire, and this, for an overcasting of green, would be a revival of that positive blue which for a long time has been consigned to oblivion. Gendarme is a dark shade of military blue, and other blues of milder type are Japonais and bleu de Sevres. Haitic blue is almost gray, and the clear pale blues are too attractive to be relinquished. Yellow finds good representation in the new spring colors, but the shade most in favor is old gold. Pale yellows are by no means ignored, and in new flowers excellent results are produced by shadings from pale yellow into reddish tints. The beige shades also appear frequently. Garnet and wine shades have also taken a new lease of life, and are brought forward every where and in all shades, from such as are so deep as to run almost into black up to others resembling the pale red of lighter wines. Pivoine (peony) is a combination of garnet and plum color. Vieux rouge is a new bright red. Dark plum is not extensively employed, yet serves as a fashionable color. The lighter shades of prune are not much seen. This place seems to have been usurped by the wine colors, but it is in the paon (peacock) colors of the day, that the greatest mixtures and changeable hues appear.

Prominent in the list of choice trimmings are the finely-twisted passementeries, which reproduce some of the designs already familiar, while the more expensive grades are composed of patterns of various forms, with perfectly-executed tufts or fuciisis depending from the center of the bow. Some of the passementeries are relieved and brightened by a delicate tracer, of gold or silver threads, interspersed so as to form arabesque or Grecian designs throughout the pattern. The effect is rich, but by no means gaudy, and the styles and prices are such as to render these goods rather exclusive, for a time at least. These cost from $5 to $12 per yard. Plaited bands for dresses are seen of exquisite design and artistic beauty. These are painted by hand on velvet, satin and silk. Flowers in all their richest tints, birds of brilliant plumage, jewels, shells and musical instruments are painted with skill and fidelity to nature on these beautiful and artistic trimmings. Fringes have by no means lost their prestige, and may be had in as great a diversity of design as there is a diversity of taste. The average depth of fringe is from four to six inches, including the heading. An entirely new fringe is formed of a hand-crocheted heading, composed of twist, front of crimped tape and bands of narrow passementerie, interspersed with strands of crochet; the depth of the passementerie bands finished with a tiny satin or crocheted ball. This elaborate fringe may be had at $6 per yard. Many plain silk fringes are still sewed underneath the edge of the goods, and no heading whatever is used. Woolen fringes are no longer considered fashionable, although very neat patterns are still sparingly used on all wool garments where there are no ends of drapery to be trimmed. Plain hems and rows of machine stitching are the most stylish finish on all other parts of all wool costumes. Fancy ribbons are largely used for loops, and in some designs form a complete cascade down the front of a dress. These vary in width from a half-inch to ten inches and a half, and are in all colors and shades of satin, with lizards, flowers, fern leaves and other devices composed of gilt and silver bullion, and fine silk floss woven into the ribbon. The prices range from twenty-five cents per yard up.

For trimming evening dresses, crystal, pearl and white satin beaded and bugled laces are showy and effective, and cost from $2 per yard up. Spanish blond is a kind of lace largely employed, and the beads follow the pattern of the lace, either covering it entirely or only defining the outline. Embroidered silk muslin is much used for the garniture of dress toilets, and comes in new and striking designs. Price, $2 to $25 per yard. "Self" trimmings follow upholstering designs, and are often put on without fulness, but cut out either in round, square or pointed designs on the lower side, and faced or bound with a contrasting color or finished with a fringe. Tassels in upholstering effects are then placed to fall in the opening made by the cutting out. Pekin, a striped material of satin and silk or satin and velvet, is much used for trimming, and is cut out so that the stripes are either horizontal or perpendicular rather than bias, this being used as a garniture for the bottom of the skirt, for cuffs, collars, vest or any accessory trimming desired.

Olive and barrel-shaped hand-crocheted buttons, either all silk or combined with jet, will be much used on garments trimmed with passementerie. Wood buttons, hand-painted in gold and colors, are very choice, light and effective, and cost from thirty-five cents per dozen up. French horn, both in the natural color and dyed, are inlaid with gold and pearl in raised designs, representing stars, flowers, birds, beasts, reptiles, fishes and fowls. Crystal glass buttons, sometimes called "Rhine pebbles," are introduced. These are cut in facets and set in plaits, and have a most brilliant effect at night; the prices vary from seventy-five cents per dozen up. Medium sizes only, in any kind of button, are fashionable, and the quantity used is totally dependent upon the style of the garment, some requiring only what will fasten the vest, and others a sufficient number to outline the cuffs, pockets, etc.—*N. A Wretch of a Husband.

The other evening a resident of Benton avenue (whose name, out of respect to himself, is omitted) took a friend home to dinner, having filled the mind of his intention with his wife, who, in consequence, had, as it were, spread herself. Woman-like, however, she insisted on disparaging everything that was brought to table in the large ratio of the square of its excellence. "I'm so sorry," she said with ill-concealed triumph, "that this mayonnaise and cheese should be so wretchedly cooked." "So wretchedly cooked?" echoed the visitor, with genuine surprise: "why, I do not remember where I ever tasted anything one-half so delicious." "It's very slightly burned, and there is not quite cheese enough in it," she said, sadly; "but if you had only been here last Sunday—don't you think so, Robert? You remember that which we had last Sunday, don't you?" she said, appealing to her husband. Instead of saying that he did, and that it was unto to that on the table as Hyperion to a satyr, the wretched man answered, "O, yes, but I thought this was twice as good—indeed, I was going to say that I never knew you to hit it up so high." She cast upon him a look that would have soured a sugar-factory, and when the dessert was brought in attacked the pie, on the ground that there was not enough butter in the crust and that the apples were too sweet. "Perhaps, though," she said, "it was the fault of the oven, for really there was no doing anything with the stove; it burns so badly." "I never tasted so perfect a pie in the whole course of my existence," said the guest, warmly. "You are very kind to say so," said the lady of the house, "but I am afraid that you only say so to please me, for it is not nearly as nice as I usually make them when I have any sort of luck; but everything seems to have gone wrong to-day with me in the kitchen, and I'm positively ashamed of having had to give you such a dinner. But you must come again, and then I hope I'll be able to entertain you better. Now, on Tuesday last, when my sister and her husband were here to tea, the pie we had then was as different—wasn't it, Robert?" "Why, I don't think it was half as good," the civilian replied, passing his plate for another piece; "indeed, I was going to say that I thought this was the best pie you ever made—reminded me more of the pies we had another used to make." The dispassionated woman bent her head over her tea-cup into which she shed bitter tears of the first magnitude, and when the guests had departed she seized the broom-handle, and shrieking, "I'll teach you another time, you spotted wretch——" Over the scene which followed we must draw a veil. Suffice it to say that this is why the inflicted husband wears sticking-plaister all over his head, and declares that if the city can't keep its sidewalks in better repair, so that a man walking home at night may be reasonably sure of not breaking his neck, it had better go and get annexed to St. Louis.—Chicago Tribune.

What Our Presidents Cost.

A correspondent sends to the Boston Herald the following curious calculation: "I have been calculating the difference between the expense of supporting a President of the United States at the salaries they have received since the first inauguration at Washington with the sum of $10,000 per year to each President during his life, the same to commence upon his inauguration day, he receiving no other pay for his services. The result is as follows: Salaries from 1789 to 1870, at $25,000 per year, $2,100,000; from 1870 to 1873 at $50,000 per year, $300,000; total, $2,400,000. The combined lives of all the Presidents to this date, dating from their first inauguration, amount to 280 years, and at $10,000 per year it amounts to $2,800,000. There being so little difference in the sums total, while for most of the time the salary has been but half what it now is, would it not be better for the country, financially and morally, and for the Presidents also, if they each received $10,000 per year during their lives, dating from their inauguration? The present expense to the Government would be $20,000 per year instead of $50,000; and it is not probable that we should have, on an average, more than two ex-Presidents living at one time, and four would not increase the present expense. The object of the large salary was clearly for the purpose of giving the outgoing President a respectable competence to retire upon, and not be driven to mental labor for his support. Would not the above plan be an improvement?"

THE silver ore about Leadville is deposited in a layer about sixty miles long and four or five miles wide. The depth at which the ore is reached varies. In some mines it is only four or five feet, under the surface, in others it is 250 feet.

Class Relations in England.

Charles L. Eastlake writes as follows in Scribner for March:

The relation in which men of unequal birth stand to each other involves a question of taste which is not easily settled. English moralists have, of late, cried the upon toadyism to such an extent that one is almost ashamed to confess acquaintance with a Lord. And yet there is no country in the world where a titled name commands such respect as in England. It is easy to explain this by saying that the aristocracy of this country is not a cheap aristocracy—that it represents an illustrious descent or an intellectual worth which is deserving of public esteem. But this was not always the case. Even in our own day men have been raised from the ranks with unscrupulous. Yet we know the mere prefix of a "Sir" before a name goes far to this day as a committee meeting or in a bath-room. Whether it be a fault or a virtue this is a National peculiarity. The lines of social demarcation are nowhere more emphatically indicated than in our own country. They do not, indeed, preclude inter-marriages, nor are they attended by the absurdities of etiquette which the Hindoo or Brahman faith must impose, but they separate, by a stern law of artificial life, class from class in a manner which is unknown elsewhere in modern Europe. They are drawn through all grades of society down, from the most polished coterie down to the humble offices of domestic life. A French or an English nursemaid would not presume to address her mistress in the familiar language which the French bonne will use toward madame. She could not be trusted with the license; not, heaven knows, because the English character has less diffidence in the composition than the French, but because she would never forget her station. A German gentleman sees nothing infra dig. in shaking hands with his tailor, but an Englishman knows that if he were to admit the tradesman to the same privilege, they would probably first undervalue it, and then presume upon it. It is a painful fact, that if you wish to command civility and attention in an ordinary London shop where you are not in the way of dealing, it is necessary to assume an air of calm superiority to the gentleman across the counter. If you approach him with a humble manner, he will treat you with an air of suspicion. But, if you are polite to him, he will often treat you with absolute contempt. How many times we have heard this from young lips, when some pleasure party or picnic was on the tapis. As if an old maid could not enjoy sailing or riding or rolling over the clover-blown hills, or eating cold-corned beef and pickles and gingerbread on the grass, as well as the free zephyrs roam at will, and the spiders and grandfather longlegs frolic about in a picnic table, where the free zephyrs roam at will, and the spiders and grandfather longlegs frolic about in a picnic table, where the free zephyrs roam at will, and the romantic notions of British freedom formed by Roman peasants and Venetian gondoliers might find realization in a sort of bondage from which they would gladly escape. What are commonly known as the "lower orders" here have much more political but far less social liberty than they enjoy under the rule of some foreign States. The origin of this state of things with us, nay, in a great measure, is attributed to the gross ignorance which has for many centuries characterized our English poor. The mental condition of the union laborer or small tradesman was many years ago, perhaps in some instances still is, far inferior to the average capacity of similar classes on the Continent. In Germany, where education has long been compulsory and undertaken by the State, the humblest errand boy is better informed on most subjects than those who occupy in the position of his employers here. It would, therefore, be most undesirable to allow familiarity from those who have never learned the dangers of its abuse.

Extraordinary Celebration at Pompeii.

A celebration of a unique character is to take place in Pompeii in November next. The Rev. J. C. Fletcher has just received from Naples information that the close of the eighteenth century of Pompeii's destruction (and preservation) is to be celebrated with great circumstance by the literary, scientific and artistic societies of all Italy in the forum of what Sir Walter Scott so appropriately termed the "City of the Dead." This extraordinary centennial will be in November; and this will surprise most persons who always read in the accounts of the destruction of the Campanian cities that Retook place in the first year of the reign of Titus (79 A. D.) on the 24th of August. Mr. Fletcher informs us that the translation of the letter of Pliny the Younger to Tacitus, giving the account of that first recorded eruption of Mount Vesuvius, and which letter is usually known to us through Melmoth's translation, is from a manuscript that contains the Roman calendar for the 24th of August; but other manuscripts of Pliny's letter have been found which place the date three months later—i. e., the 24th of November. Signor Fivreili, the most learned archeologist on Pompeii, in his Giornale degli Scavi di Pompei, made the first to call wide attention to the proper date (November). Beside, Dion Cassius, one of the earliest writers after the second century, who wrote on the destruction of Herculaneum and Pompeii by Vesuvius, says distinctly it took place in "the autumn." Mr. Fletcher says that he made a special study of fruits and nuts preserved by the ashes, which came down in a mud paste after the pumice-stone, at Pompeii, and he observed in almost every case that they were nuts and fruits (as chestnuts, etc.) which cannot be preserved from one year to year, and which are not in season until after the middle of September.

The day in November next is to be celebrated by excavations of houses, by addresses, and by a banquet in the daytime, and at night by an illumination of the old Greco-Roman city, whose fate was sealed eighteen hundred years ago.—Cincinnati Commercial.

A Question of Damages.

Some lawyers take very practical views of cases in which they are retained. In a certain town in Missouri Squire G—— was defending a charge of malpractice. A colored man was suing for damages, his wife having died shortly after an operation for the removal of cancer. When it came Squire G—— s turn to cross-examine the plaintiff, he asked: "Mr. Wilson, how old was your wife when she died?"

"About forty-five, sir."

"Been in feeble health a long time, had she not, Mr. Wilson, and cost you a great deal for medicine and help?"

"Yes, sir."

"You have married again, have you not?"

"Yes, sir."

"How old is your present wife?"

"About thirty-five, sir."

"Is she stout and healthy, Mr. Wilson?"

"Yes, sir."

"Then, Mr. Wilson, will you please state to this jury how you are damaged in this case?"

Mr. Wilson had evidently never taken this view of the matter, and could make no answer. The good and true men thought he had taste rather a good thing by his bereavement, and brought in a verdict for the defendant. —Editor's Drawer, in Harper's Magazine for April.

Old Maids.

We think very likely we have written something about old maids before this, for every scribbler has had his fling at them, and every newspaper editor has published jokes about them, and every would-be witty man has sneeringly spoken of some one of the fraternity as "only an old maid."

Why not say only an old married woman? To be an old maid is not to lack respectability, though many people would convey that impression by their treatment of single women.

"Don't invite her—she's an old maid!" How many times we have heard this from young lips, when some pleasure party or picnic was on the tapis. As if an old maid could not enjoy sailing or riding or rolling over the clover-blown hills, or eating cold-corned beef and pickles and gingerbread on the grass, as well as the free zephyrs roam at will, and the spiders and grandfather longlegs frolic about in a picnic table, where the free zephyrs roam at will, and the romantic notions of British freedom formed by Roman peasants and Venetian gondoliers might find realization in a sort of bondage from which they would gladly escape. What are commonly known as the "lower orders" here have much more political but far less social liberty than they enjoy under the rule of some foreign States. The origin of this state of things with us, nay, in a great measure, is attributed to the gross ignorance which has for many centuries characterized our English poor. It would, therefore, be most undesirable to allow familiarity from those who have never learned the dangers of its abuse.

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

—Mr. G. A. Sala, writing in the Illustrated London News of the "higher education of women," holds that if clever girls were "taught to paint on porcelain, to model in clay and wax, to turn, to carve, and especially to draw on wood, they would be a hundred times better employed and fifty times nearer the possibility of earning from three to ten pounds sterling a week than in 'spanking' the piano."

—Mr. Muller, of the Bristol Orphanages, says, in his thirty-ninth annual report: "Since founding the institution we have received, simply through prayer and the exercise of faith, more than $3,920,050. Sixty-six thousand six hundred children or grown-up persons have been brought up in the various schools, entirely supported by the funds of the institution. Ten thousand five hundred children now attend the schools."

—Corporal punishment is still permitted in the public schools of Boston, subject to the rule that it shall always consist of blows on the hand with a rattan. Superintendent Eliot advocates further restriction, so that whipping shall never be inflicted while the teacher is in a passion. "There should be," he says, "an interval between the offense and the punishment at least as long as that between two sessions." But imagine the torturing suspense in which the pupil would be placed.

—Mr. Spurgeon regards his Pastors' College as his favorite work. It began with one pupil, and now numbers nearly a hundred. The first requirement for admission is that a man shall have preached two years; no special standard of literary excellence or social position is enforced. Mr. Spurgeon says the policy has been to "imitate the florist by planting a large number of slips in the hope that some of them would strike." From an article in the London News it appears that the teaching, are excellent when combined with sour-krout. As an anti-scorbutic, as a vegetable preparation easily digested, this preparation of cabbage is among the very best.—N. Y. Times.

—Potato Croquet. — One pound mashed potatoes, one egg, one tablespoonful of milk, a little pepper and salt, a few spoonfuls of bread crumbs and cracker dust. Potatoes must be mashed when thoroughly cold; then mashed throw in a small quantity of salt, a tablespoonful of milk, a little pepper and the yelk of the egg. Stir the yelk with the potatoes over the fire till thoroughly dry. Flour the board well; take a little of the mashed potato and roll lightly in the flour; shape them into any shape. When the croquet is well formed, beat up the whites of one egg, roll the croquets in the egg over all a little bread-crumb or cracker-dust.

—Fillets of Beef and Bouche Sauce.—One and a quarter pound fillet of beef sliced about one inch thick, grease slightly with broiler, place the beef on it and place the broiler under the flame, allowing beef to broil for about seven minutes, turning it once. For Dutch sauce take one tablespoonful cream, half a tablespoonful of water, the yelks of two eggs, a little pepper and salt, a chancre of butter, and the juice of half a lemon. Put the water in a small saucepan, and with it the yelks of eggs. After mixing add the lemon juice, cream, butter, pepper and salt; place it over a very hot fire till it thickens, but don't allow it to boil. Having taken the fillets of beef from the broiler, after broiling several minutes, place them in a dish and pour the Dutch sauce around ready for use.

—Amber Pudding.—Two pounds of raw apples, three ounces of sugar, one gill of cold water, a teaspoonful of lemon juice yelks and whites of four eggs, six ounces of flour, two ounces of butter, half teaspoonful of yeast powder, a piece of salt. Peel and core ounces of the sugar in a small saucepan, with half a gill of water; place in the apples, pared and cored; squeeze over them the lemon juice; put the flour in a basin with two ounces of butter; rub the butter carefully in the flour; then add the yeast-powder, salt and remaining half gill of water; place the whole on a board and knead lightly together; roll the dough a trifle more than an inch in thickness; wet the edges of a small pie-dish with cold water, and line the edges with some of the dough; wet the dough with water or milk; the dough on the board roll thin, and with a small cutter cut out rounds of the dough and place them on the edge of the pie-dish, upon the dough already covering the dish. When the apples, which have been put in the saucepan with the sugar, water and lemon juice, have become soft, rub them through a wire sieve; then drop into the sauce, one at a time, the yelks of four eggs; mix the eggs and the apples together without beating the yelks, and pour them into the pie-dish, in the hollow formed by the dough cakes; place the dish in the oven for ten minutes.

Green Pease for the Garden.

This is one of the vegetables which market gardeners saw early in the spring. We have for several years urged upon farmers the desirability of having a considerable quantity of pease for family use. They precede green corn, and certainly of the early vegetables there is none so delightful as the green pea. Children, who are sometimes averse to green vegetable food, seldom refuse tender green pease, especially when they are cooked "thin," or in plenty of juice, with just a dash of sugar. There are varieties in plenty which are so sweet of themselves that sugar is superfluous; but children have a "sweet tooth" and sometimes the elders can stand a little extra sweetening. Many of us remember that in our childhood days the strong, nauseous and sometimes bitter marrowfat pea was cooked "to death," cooked until it was a sort of mash or mush. Our housewives are learning that nothing is lost in nutriment, while much is gained in delicousness by cooking pease, as the children say, "thin." Indeed, one of the most delightful, though perhaps for hard-workers not very substantial or "filling," of soups is one made from green pease. The finest varieties are the wrinkled sorts. Epicures seldom nowadays fancy the plump, solid varieties, like the marrowfats, which, we confess, are very productive and sizable. It is best to plant early, for the early plantings produce the greatest crops. The pea is hardy. The soil should be warm and light, and the authorities tell us that if the ground has been manured the year previous results are best. Indeed, we cannot too strongly recommend fall manuring. Nevertheless, we have seen a good result from clover sod, spring plowed, with the addition of barnyard manure and superphates. The objection to manuring in the spring is that the pease run too much to straw. A chemist told us last year that his crops at once was that pease got their best flavor from soil which contained strong manures yet we tried phosphates and had the most delicious pease we ever tasted. The ground should be finely worked, while another plot, badly worked and lumpy, produced nothing but weak blossoms. On the successful plot we planted pease which had been started in strata in old boxes. In boxes of strong loam, with just a little artificial fertilizer, plant two inches of soil to a fair sprinkling of pease, moistening each layer, and then put the boxes near the stove, occasionally sprinkling with tepid water. In two or three days the pease had sprouted a quarter of an inch. The soil in the garden was ready, and the boxes set out-side were given a shake against the ground, the pease were loosened with their soil, and the sort of gelatine screening between the fingers, so as not to break the sprouts, the pease were tenderly planted in the soil and solemnly covered and slightly patted with the list of the hoe. They were above ground in thirty-six hours, and produced a fine crop. Market gardeners usually soak their seed for five or six hours before planting in dry weather, and usually the drills are watered. Old celery land is good for pease. Harris recommends that it is best to print pease as soon as the ground is thawed out enough to cover them, say three or four inches. He also recommends artificial manures, and says that a tablespoonful to three tablespoonfuls to the foot in the drill. Two, in our opinion, is the right quantity. Some drills should be about two and one-half to three inches deep, and two or three feet apart. For the tall varieties we find better success with double rows, so that the brush can be placed between them. These double rows should be six to eight inches apart. And do not forget that pease need hoeing. The hoeing should be done when they have grown about six inches high. As soon as the pease are picked the straw should be pulled, as it exhausts the soil. It is a mistake to put off the planting of late pease. If planted with the early ones they will ripen later any way; but they may be counted late for successon. —N. Y. Herald.

A Sure Remedy.

A King of Prussia found a remedy for the prima donna nuisance. The King was in the Opera House in Berlin, and wanted to hear the opera. He was in no mood to be disappointed. The reigning prima donna had a habit of getting a sore throat and being hoarse when anything ruffled her temper. On a night when His Majesty was in his box eager for opera, the management announced that the diva had a sore throat and could not sing. The audience were about to make a row, when the King arose and commanded them to remain. They kept their places. Behind the scenes an officer and four dragoons entered the lady's room. The officer said: "The King inquires after your health." "The King is very good; I have a sore throat." "His Majesty knows it, and has charged me to take you at once to the Military Hospital to be cured." She soon found herself in a coach with the four dragoons. "I am a little better now; I will try to sing." "Back to the theater," said the officer to the coachman. "If you will not be able to sing my best." "I think you will." "And pray why?" "Because we have orders to remain behind the scenes and carry you off to the Military Hospital at the least hesitation." The lady never sang better in her life, and was effectually cured of hoarseness while she remained in Berlin. But we have no King or convenient military hospital to cure our sick birds.—Missouri Republican.

DOMESTIC AND CULINARY.

—Yelk of eggs is as nourishing as white, though a little heavier.

—In making an Irish stew the suet should be chopped finely and the dough kneaded as lightly as possible. The less it is kneaded the lighter the crust will be.

—Excellent Doughnuts.—One cup of molasses, one cup of sour milk or buttermilk, two eggs, two tablespoonfuls of melted butter or cream, and one scant teaspoonful of soda.

—Fish and other dishes often come upon the table very greasy. The way to prevent this is to place brown or white paper over them, letting it touch the greasy surface. Paper absorbs fat.

—Of any one who keeps shoemakers' supplies, you can get for fifteen cents a whetstone, which is coarse and soft, and which will put on a knife with a few strokes an edge that excels everything but the grindstone. Those who have used this convenience, could never keep house again without one. But take care never to heat it wet or greasy.

—In frying anything the fat should never be allowed to boil. Its proper heat for frying may be known by observation. When it reaches 375 degrees of heat a faint blue smoke rises which tells that it is ready for use. If, however, it begins to smoke before it reaches this point it is unfit for use, and should be thrown away.—Exchange.

Silent Forces.

Workmen in the stone-quarries sometimes find a very hard kind of rock; they pick little grooves for the iron wedges, and then, with great sledge-hammers, drive the wedges into the flinty rock. And yet, once in a while, was in no mood to be disappointed. The reigning prima donna had a habit of getting a sore throat and being hoarse when anything ruffled her temper. An Indian Funeral.

"Ned," a Digger Indian, was found dead alongside the railroad track near Auburn, last Wednesday, having apparently fallen from the platform of a car and fractured his skull. His friends being notified, they placed the remains upon a horse and conveyed them to Clipper Gap, where they were duly cremated in the manner customary with the red men of that section. The funeral pile, which is built of wood to the height of about four feet, is kept burning about five hours, during which time relatives and friends place upon it such articles as they desire to contribute to aid the deceased when he shall have arrived at the happy hunting grounds—one gives a blanket, another a bow and arrow, another a saddle, etc. When the flesh has all been consumed but only the bones remain, these are raked together and a fire kept burning about them until they also become ashes. When the fire finally dies out the ashes are all collected, taken to the burial ground and interred, a little sugar loaf sinaped mound being erected over them. The female relatives of the deceased, as evidence of mourning, smear their faces and heads with tar—the extent of the superstitious indicating the closeness of their relationship.

—And this is left until it naturally wears off. There was a large attendance at "Ned's" funeral, every train arriving at the Gap bringing a number of Indians and squaws. As they were allowed to ride free on the trains many simply press the bucks into service when it is necessary to wood up, but on such occasions they are distinctly informed, on repaying, "No work; funeral to-day."—Sacramento (Cal.) Record-Union.

A DETROIT citizen will begin March 1 the attempt to walk from his house to his office, a distance of six squares, four times per day for one month—a feat never before attempted by any human being in the West. He has already gone into the hands of a trainer, and even in three days he has made such progress that he can stand a fifty-pound sack of flour on end without looking red in the face. His friends are confident that he will succeed in this great undertaking, and are willing to make him money at 25-per-cent. interest. If the feat is accomplished, the citizen will be on exhibition in front of the City Hall for three days in admission free, children not permitted to approach nearer than ten feet.—Detroit Free Press.

Feels Young Again.

"My mother suffered a long time with Neuralgia and a dull, heavy, inactive condition of the whole system; headache, nervous prostration, and was a sufferer for years. Physicians or medicines did her any good. Three bottles of Dr. Kilmer's Female Remedy, the first regulating medicine she began to use Hop Bitters, with such good effect that she seems and feels young again. Is seventy years old. We think there is no other medicine fit to use in the family."—Lady, Providence, R. I.

The Only Way.

The only way to cure catarrh is by the use of a cleansing and healing lotion, applied to the nostrils and upper nasal membrane. Snuffs and fumigators, while affording temporary relief, dissipate the affected parts and excite a more extended inflammation. Beside, no outward application can cure catarrh. The disease originates in a vitiated state of the blood, and a thorough alterative course of treatment is necessary to remove it from the system. Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy has long been known as an efficient standard remedy for this disease, but, to insure a radical and permanent cure, it should be used in connection with Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, the best vegetable alterative yet discovered. The Discovery cleanses the blood, while Sage's Catarrh Remedy allays the inflammation and heals the diseased tissue.

THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, APR. 1, - - - 1879

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

NEW YORK MAR 21, 1879.

EDITOR SENTINEL

Why Saint Patrick, who, as as proud nent and pious a saint, ought at least to have the gift of prophecy, should have selected such a day as the 17th of March for his own particular anniversary, is a puzzle. It is always wet and miserable. It looks as though the weather bureau were attempting to accumplish 1,000 storms in 1,000 consecutive 17ths of March. The oldest inhabitant can't name a recurrence of this anniversary when the weather was hot to some extent laid, both over head and under foot. And yet the invariable programme continues to be carried out. Paddy puts on a shocking bad hat and paradise, and Biddy stands on the sidewalk and applauds, both more or less heavily draped with green and mud, and toward night especially more or less heavily charged with the national beverage. It is a great and a glorious day, and was duly observed in the metropolis last week, the traditional wetness, procession and whiskey being all present.

Apart from the occurrence of St. Patrick's Day, the calendar week just ess celebrated itself in various small ways, a few of which I will notice briefer. In the first place the three successful walkers in the late melee at Gilmore's have had their final business meeting, audited their accounts, received their respective checks, been mildly feted, and at last dispersed, leaving Gotham only partially convalescent from her pedestrian lunacy. I thought that when this big match was over, the population would calm down and resume their senses; but that result has not yet arrived.

Not only are every available public hall and enclosure in town still filled with pedestrians bent on fame and gate money, but three fourths of the people one meets in the street plainly show the symptoms of the general mania. When walking abroad and watching the passing throng I have even found myself unconsciously affected by the pedestrian atmosphere, and caught myself wondering whether my gait was the regulation "toe and heel," whether my elbows had just the proper "play," and if my "knee action" was exactly what it ought to be. It's awful, but we can comfort ourselves with the old Latin's motto, that "This too shall finally pass away."

Some of those who govern us are living a pas sably breezy time of it just now. After a hard fight on the part of our Tammany County Clerk to keep his pecuniations and his place at the same time, he has had his official head taken off by Governor Robinson with such a clean and sudden stroke that he was out on the street and his successor in his place before he had coy opportunity to make the forcible resistance to his ejectment which he had threatened. There was raring in Tammany for a little while, with threats of suits and arrest and troubles of all sorts; but the raging Sachems have finally settled down into a sullen quiet. In the City Hall also there is war. Mayor Cooper having fully aware of the disgraceful demoralizing which has of late come to be the distinguishing characteristic of the New York Police department and all its subordinate bureaus, has written to each of our three Police Commissioners a brief but pithy letter, charging them with both inefficiency and malfeasance, in terms which must have made their ears tingle, and ending with a request for them to come before him and show cause why they should not be removed. The same official has also, been similarly summoned during the incumbency of Mr. Cooper's predecessor, engaged sharp lawyers to conduct their case, which the latter did with so much cunning, that not only was Mayor Ely unable to remove the city worthies, but the city was forced to pay their lawyers' bills.

Naturally enough the Commissioners were so well pleased with that experience that they wanted to repeat it in the present instance; and so when they came before the Mayor in response to his citation, each one was attended by a [illegible] "counsel learned in the law." But Mr. Cooper was not to be caught in the same way and positively declining to recognize the claims of the law directed all his questions to the accused parties. The latter refused to answer except through counsel and a high old time ensued. The lawyers got up to talk and the Mayor ordered them to stop, to which order no attention was paid. Then the Mayor got excited and sent for an officer with the directed to stop the attorney's harangue, but when the latter approached with the uplifted purpose of taking away the paper from which the latter was reading it was handed over to another lawyer who took up the thread of the discourse. Then the Mayor got furious and ordered them put out of his office, but the poor policeman, who didn't know whether the Commissioners or the Mayor would come out ahead and was precisely destroyed of keeping his own head but ered side up in any case, hesitated between the two fires and did nothing. Shortly after the session ended without anything very definite having been accomplished, and now the city breathlessly awaits further developments.

Meanwhile the commissioners, perhaps by way of compensation for being so persecuted by the Mayor, have taken up and are now trying the case of police captain Williams, one of the most corrupt and brutal subordinates, a man whose proper place would be in the State Prison, and whose dismissal from the force would be a wholesome warning to all such evil-doers as he, and could everybody who gets in their way except criminals.

The most grateful occurrence of the whole week was the publication of the Surrogate's decision ousting the unsavory Vanderbilt will case The evidence upon which it was sought to break the will was of the flimsiest character; it convinced nobody but the contestants and their lawyers, even of it convinced them. It consisted of the oldest rubbish and the most disgusting scandalous accusations ever uttered by a judicial tribunal. The reason why the case of the contestants so suddenly and utterly broke down was the introduction of several wills of the Commodore, executed when he was in the fullness of his strength and the best state of his faculties, making precisely the same discriminations and against precisely the same heirs as his last will and testament, which has been the subject of this protracted contest. These precious wills made when his mind was at its best, prove most conclusively that the final distribution of his property by his last will was in pursuance of a deliberate and long settled purpose formed many years in advance of that state of his health and of his mind, which was alleged as the ground for setting aside the will presented to the Surrogate. There was never a more disgraceful collapse of an utterly scandalous case.

Something which the cynical reader might interpret as an attempt by the Long Branch hotel men to get a little gratuitous advance advertising for that once favorite resort appears in the press pretty regularly at this time of year. It comes in the shape of sensational reports of incendiarism, and an alleged conspiracy to destroy the whole town We have just been favored with the third or fourth annual edition of these yarns, with additions and variations. Singularly enough the ruthless firebugs have done very little damage (the hotel men are careful to have that understood,) and "everything is being placed in readiness for the brilliant season which, &c., &c."

The Chicago Tribune takes this view of Michigan politics:

The embarrassments of an alliance between the Democrats and Fusionists have already become so deep out in Michigan where such a combination has been made. The sound money Democrats in that State are interesting in vigorous terms against the prostitution of the party organization to the will and perfidious schemes of Patton, and, at the same time, the honest Greenbackers who sympathize with the Republican party in other National issues declare outright that they will not be used to further the cause of State sovereignty, nor to support the scheme for dishonest currency, nor to restore the "Solid South" to undisputed control of National affairs thru the Public Treasury.

MASONRY IN MICHIGAN.—Michigan has about 300 Masons who have reached the thirty-second degree in Free Masonry in the Scottish rite or branch. The thirty-second degree is the next to the last step in the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite, the thirty-third being the highest pinnacle of the mystic brotherhood. This degree is styled the Sovereign Grand Inspector General, and it is limited as to numbers, each Consistory having the power to nominate a man whenever a vacancy occurs. There are eighteen S. G. I. G.'s in Michigan.

Why Will You

Allow a cold to advance in your system and thus encourage more serious maladies, such as Pneumonia, Bronchitis and Lung troubles when an immediate relief can be so easily attained. Hoxsie's German Syrup has gained the largest sale in the world for the cure of Coughs, Colds and the severest Lung Diseases. It is Dr. Hoxsie's famous German prescription, and is prepared with the greatest care, and no fear need be entertained to administering it to the youngest child as per directions. The sale of this medicine is unprecedented. Since first introduced there has been a constant increasing demand and without a single report of a failure to do its work in any case. Ask your Druggist as to the truth of these remarks. Large size 75 cents. For sale and be convinced. Sold by Geo. W. Cobb & Co.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

AT a Baptist Church, in Baltimore, Md., a few nights ago, Miss Louise Donaldson, while assisting to baptize a lady, suddenly expired. It was thought death was caused by heart disease.

THE distribution of the net proceeds of the late pedestrian contest, in New York, is as follows, according to a dispatch of the 11th: Howell, $21,500; Ennis, $12,300; Hazlett, $8,500; O'Leary, $4,000. Weston, once an American pedestrian of some note, has, it is reported, challenged Howell for the possession of the belt, the match to occur in London, England, on the 5th of May, and continuing six days.

A SCIENTIFIC examination of the "sulking" which fell in the shower over the Lehigh Valley, Pa., the other day, proves it to be the pollen from a species of pine, brought by the wind from the Jersey forests.

A HOUSE near Ponca, Dakota, was destroyed by fire, a few days ago, and Mrs. Rigney, misery years old, was burned to death.

THE finishing is the full text of the President's Message to Congress, sent in on the 19th:

FELLOW-CITIZENS OF THE SENATE AND HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES: The failure of the last Congress to make the requisite appropriations for legislative and judicial purposes, for the expenses of the several Executive Departments of the Government, and for the support of the army, has rendered it necessary to call a session of the Forty-sixth Congress before the commencement of the regular session, which would otherwise be convened by the Secretary of the Treasury at the opening of last session of the present; and as no benefit has resulted to both the Senate and House of Representatives, beginning the public business of the emergency which requires a special session of Congress at a time when it is the general judgment of the country that public welfare will be best promoted by permanency in our legislation, and by peace and rest, I commend these facts to your immediate and your considerate attention.

RUTHERFORD B. HAYES.

WASHINGTON, March 18, 1879.

ON the 18th, two men were instantly killed and four seriously injured by the premature explosion of dynamite in the Pottsville (Pa.) Colliery.

A THREE-CORNERED shooting affray occurred at Vicksburg, Miss., on the evening of the 18th, which resulted in the instant death of Capt. W. H. Andrews and Wm. H. Greene and the fatal wounding of Capt. W. F. Feingerald. The difficulty arose over an election of officers of the Hibernian Society.

THE Southern Bank of New Orleans, the oldest bank in the city, failed a few days ago, was placed in the hands of receivers. The deficiency is stated to be $700,000. The Mechanics' and Traders' Bank followed suit, and as soon as the news got abroad a panic ensued, and a run was precipitated directed mainly against the Canal, Louisiana State, Germania, Union and People's Banks. On the 20th, the Clearing House, as a measure tending to allay the excitement, adopted a resolution declaring that until March 29 no depositor should check out more than $200 in one day, and that all other drafts should be paid in certificate checks. The following is a list of banks whose temporary suspension was announced, on the 20th: Germania, Hibernia, Louisiana, Mutual, New Orleans, State and Union National Banks, Bank of Lafayette, Citizens' Bank of Louisiana, Citizens' Savings Bank, Louisiana Savings Bank, Metropolitan Bank, New Orleans Canal and Banking Company, People's and Workingmen's Banks.

NOTICE was given, on the 20th, that the United States Treasury Department would at once redeem the called bonds embraced in the seven-eighths to eighteen calls, inclusive, paying interest to date of redemption, or it would redeem at once the bonds included in said calls, with interest to date of maturity, and apply the proceeds to the payment of and subscription for 4-per-cent. consols.

BARTHOLOMEW O'DONNELL, eighty years of age, finished an eighty-mile walk in twenty-six hours, at Brooklyn, N. Y., a few evenings ago.

THE Memphis (Tenn.) Cotton and Woolen Mills were struck by lightning, on the morning of the 20th, and entirely destroyed. Loss, $90,000. By this disaster 150 persons are thrown out of employment.

A MAN caught robbing a store at Jamestown, N.Y., a few nights ago, was shot dead by the proprietor, who had been aroused by the noise made by the robber. Fifteen buckshot penetrated the body of the burglar.

A. HUARD, the paving-feller of the Mechanics' and Traders' Bank of New Orleans, committed suicide by shooting himself with a revolver, on the morning of the 21st. The money in the vaults of the bank was about being counted by a civil officer, and Huard, being a defaulter in a large amount, it is thought the committed self-destruction to avoid the consequence of detection.

INFORMATION received in Washington, on the 21st, from Col. Walsh, who is in command of the mounted police on the Dakota Frontier, reports that Sitting Bull and his warriors are showing a very ugly and insubordinate disposition. They had, as yet, made no movement toward the boundary-line, but serious trouble was apprehended as soon as spring should open. Col. Walsh estimates the strength of Sitting Bull's band at 7,000, all told, of whom 2,000 were warriors, well armed and equipped. Gen. The Confederate congress has been removed from Richmond to Washington.

It is now quite probable that the extra session of congress will be prolonged until June. The House stands to get into general legislation, while the Senate does not wish to do.

The St. Louis Republican warns its readers that in exporting cotton at the present time, because the North has not yet begun to feel seriously its scarcity, foreign consumers have come forward too aggressively, both as to time and price.

In the last speech of his life, Stephen A. Douglas, the Little Giant of the West, said: "There can be but two questions—Union and Disunion." One thinks what Zach Chandler thinks—and rejoices when all hearing the adversary mumbles as Jeff. Davis.

The straw from California: At the recent city election in Sacramento, the straight ticket is worn in the field, and the Republicans elected their municipal by a larger vote than the united votes cast for the Workingmen's and Democratic candidates.

Seventy-five Confederate soldiers, mostly Generals, sit in the House of Representatives in Congress to-day. The only Union soldier who was a candidate for office in the Senate was defeated, and there is not one Union soldier among the officers chosen by the Democratic caucus.

Upwards of three hundred thousand copies of Zach. Chandler's speech against secession, delivered in the Senate, and ordered printed at Washington for general circulation among the people. Two old war horses says he's sorry the rebels didn't come back at him; that he only fired a third load, but was loaded for bear for the next shot.

The grow University still has room for another stage to its new progress. A Professorship was endowed last week at Ann Arbor, and in favor of the University. The notice at first figured gave the Regents $81. Designs objected to the manner in which interest was figured, and finally after a good deal of figuring on both sides it stood $16.46 in favor of Douglas. It may be carried to the Supreme Court now.

Vanderbilt has proceeded to dig a tunnel under the Detroit river at Grosse Isle, 15 miles below Detroit, for his Canada Southern road. It will be begun at once and will cost $1,000,000, and will be 2,500 feet long. Distinguished building circles are trying to widen and deepen, to new building ground around them. They bet every chance slip by and get mad when it is too late. Ten years ago when a trifling investment might have secured them the business of Northwestern Michigan they waited as usual and the G. P. & I. and steamers had secured it. Eastern Roads and Chicago. The business as it consistently reserving business of this portion of the State, which might have secured to Detroit has been lost to the city that will never have a section by its mistakes.

The organization of the new Congress presents some curious features. So many who fought to save the Union in the ranks of loyal, patriotic but ancient men assembled in Washington but seven years ago would have looked forward a decade and a half, it is likely they would have been somewhat astonished, to see disunionists. Granting as the Rebels would have themselves the seats filled by rebel Regulars while an army of ex-Confederate soldiers swarmed in the public places. Looking over the Senate, they would have seen eighteen prominent rebel Generals receiving in the high-backed chairs, a Confederate editor at the Secretary's desk, and the oil-lamp of the Union minister in chief of the rebel army in the confidential position of Executive Clerk of the Senate. At first sight the situation would lend them to suppose that taxators had triumphed, and that the rebel army, which had been so near striving to capture the Capitol, had at last succeeded. But listen to the proceedings for a few hours, and it would seem as if the Confederates had been victorious, and the remains of the Union army, which only a few years ago had driven them from the field, were now the prisoners of war.

Davis, passages revealing the fact that the rebellion had failed, that loyalty had triumphed, that the Union had been restored, and then, bewildered and doubting, the world gaze would look around at these relics of a Dream and Delusion, and ask themselves if nightmare were possible. Houston, whose brief flag gave threatened destruction to Washington, sits in the house as a humble member of Congress. Mississippi sends to the Senate Jefferson Davis, who had commanded over a half million organized soldiers, and who exercised more than regal power. Alexander H. Stephens, who had been the head of the Confederate Congress, is in the House of Representatives, and Toombs, who had been Secretary of State, sits in the Senate. Wigfall, who had been a Brigadier General in the Confederate army, is in the Senate. Hill, who had been a Major General in the Confederate army, is in the Senate. Gordon, who had been a Major General in the Confederate army, is in the Senate. Lamar, who had been Commissioner to Russia, is in the Senate. Hampton, who had been a Lieutenant General in the Confederate army, is in the Senate. Ransom, who had been a Major General in the Confederate army, is in the Senate. Brown, who had been Governor of Georgia, is in the Senate. Vance, who had been Governor of North Carolina, is in the Senate. Gilmer, who had been a member of the Confederate Congress, is in the House. Clark, who had been Governor of Missouri, is in the Senate. Jones, who had been Secretary of the Confederate Treasury, is in the Senate. Lubbock, who had been Governor of Texas, is in the House. Reagan, who had been Postmaster General of the Confederacy, is in the House. Hemphill, who had been a Confederate Senator, is in the House. Bocock, who had been Speaker of the Confederate House of Representatives, is in the House. Boyce, who had been a member of the Confederate Congress, is in the House. Crisp, who had been a member of the Confederate Congress, is in the House. Conrad, who had been Secretary of State of the Confederacy, is in the House. Hilton, who had been a member of the Confederate Congress, is in the House. Kenner, who had been a member of the Confederate Congress, is in the House. Marshall, who had been a member of the Confederate Congress, is in the House. Stovall, who had been a member of the Confederate Congress, is in the House. Swan, who had been a member of the Confederate Congress, is in the House. Wilson, who had been a member of the Confederate Congress, is in the House. Young, who had been a member of the Confederate Congress, is in the House. Wright, who had been a member of the Confederate Congress, is in the House. The Confederate Congress has been removed from Richmond to Washington.

It is now quite probable that the extra session of Congress will be prolonged until June. The House wants to get into general legislation, which the Senate does not wish to do.

The St. Louis Republican warns the South that it is getting to be a literary nuisance, because the North does not like to find so much literature of Confederate origin forced upon it for reading, free of charge.

The Chicago Times asks Mr. Zach. Chandler to please remember that ex-President Davis has suffered enough at the hands of Michigan. It was Michigan soldiers that deserted his cause to death his training days.

In the last speech of his life, Stephen A. Douglas, the Little Giant of the West, said: "There can be but two questions—treason and loyalty." Ever thirty-eight Zach Chandler chokes and talks when addressing that unhearing friend of his, Jeff. Davis.

The straw from California. At the recent city election in Sacramento, three straight tickets were in the field, and the Republicans elected their nominees by a larger vote than the united votes cast for the Workingmen's and Democratic candidates.

Seventy three Confederate soldiers, mostly Generals, sit in the House of Representatives in Congress today. The only Union soldiers who were candidates for office in the South were Lafayette Head, and there I find one Union soldier among the officers chosen by the Democratic caucus.

Upwards of three hundred thousand copies of Zach. Chandler's speech against pensioning Jeff Davis have been ordered printed at Washington for general circulation among the people. The old war horse says he's sorry the rebels didn't come back at him—that he only fired a first load, but was loaded for bear for the next shot.

The great Democratic soldiers' reunion at Chicago is to be held next September. A decision was rendered last week against Daniel Sickles in favor of the Park Society. The matter as first figured gave the figures $81. Brokers objected to the manner in which interest was figured, and finally after a good deal of figuring on both sides it stood $16 16 in favor of Douglas. It may be carried to the Supreme Court now.

Vanderbilt has consented to run a tunnel under the Detroit river at Windsor, Ont., 17 miles below Detroit, for the Canada Southern road. It will be a gigantic piece, and cost $1 500,000, all told. $750 has been offered by Detroiters for building their crossing trying to weaken stuff mostly to see what is going around them. They let every chance slip by and get mad when it is too late. Ten years ago when a trifling investment might have secured them the business of Northwestern Michigan they wanted as much now the G. R. & I. at its own expense to be extended to the straits and thereby secured a direct line to Grand Rapids and Chicago. The business and extensively increasing business of this portion of the state, which might have been carried to Detroit, has been lost to the city that will never face it written in its mistakes.

The organization of the new Congress presents some curious features. Both men who fought to save the Union and the friends of loyal, patriotic but ancient men who assembled in Washington fifteen years ago would scarce have looked for a change and a limit, it is likely they would have been somewhat astonished, if not downright frightened at the House they would have discovered the seats filled by rebel brigadiers, while an army of ex-Confederate soldiers swarmed in the public places. Looking over the States, they would have seen eighteen prominent rebel Generals receiving a liberal salary each, without any fear of the cause. Some of the leading spirits from the secession movement are in this session of the new Congress, and could be easily accommodating that to the declaration every day the war should last. Look the longest after long and well offered Southerners, Jeff. Davis, Alex. Stephens, Toombs, Benj. Hill, Wade Hampton, Gordon, Lamar, Forrest, Hood, Longstreet, Early, Gilmer, Ewell,

AN "educated" Chinaman writes to the Boston Advertiser: "In your Declaration of Independence it is asserted that all men are born free and equal." He repeats a very common error. The correct reading is: "All men are created equal."

MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

—It is stated that in one small river, not far from Nancy, France, there are annually collected some 25,000 kilograms of the "ablette," a small white fish, from which is obtained a substance called the essence of d'orient, and is employed in the manufacture of artificial pearls. This substance accompanies the scales of the ablette, and is detached when the scales are rubbed up for a considerable time and thrown into a vase of water; to collect it, the water is poured off from the vase upon a fine hair sieve, which retains the scales and allows the water and the product sought to pass through it. The latter sinks to the bottom, and is obtained pure by decanting the water, a little ammonia being added to prevent its decomposition.

—Many a man eight years ago the city authorities of London offered a prize for any invention which would enable them to get rid of snow in the streets. Seventeen schemes were submitted. The successful apparatus was at once erected, and has been in operation every year since. It consists simply of an inclined plate of iron, fixed below a man-hole leading to the main sewer. Under this plate are arranged gas-burners. The snow carted from the adjoining thoroughfares is shoveled by the man-hole grating, falls on the heated plate, is reduced to water and passes away down the sewer. The consumption of gas is 2,000 cubic feet, and the cost is said to be much less than that incurred by clearing away the snow on the pavement. The apparatus, says the Engineer, has proved extremely successful, and the invention deserves to be widely adopted.

—The opinion has become quite prevalent among engineers, in respect to ventilation of sewers and drains, that the poisonous and mephitic vapors which are produced in sewers must be removed, so that the sewers be purified—thus contaminating the atmosphere and transposing the pure air into the sewers where it is not needed, and from the sewers bringing the poisonous emanations up into the houses. But this theory is that the liberated gases are heavier than atmospheric air, and, consequently, remain in the sewers, mugging the surface of the earth, so as to provide invigorating air. A better way, it is thought, to give the sewers plenty of water, which carries the matter contained in them to the sea, impedes decomposition as long as the solid matter is sufficiently immersed, and is a powerful absorbent of sewer gases, especially the ammoniacal, which it takes up to the extent of one hundred its weight, or some four hundred times its own bulk.

—An ingenious contrivance for awakening a sleeper at any required hour is announced among the recent minor inventions. The apparatus is to be fixed on an ordinary clock, and is so adjusted that when the hour hand of the clock touches a button, an electric circuit is completed, the minute-hand passing over the button without effect. There are a series of holes for the different hours, into any one of which the button can be pushed, according to the time selected for awakening. The completion of the electric circuit may ring a bell or sound any other of the ordinary methods of alarm. But this contrivance has a yet more effective method for arousing a dead sleeper, and one which the thieves in laying hold of what they wanted.

On the night of the 7th of May the poor lady had put on the wrist at the time of retiring; to this flexible wires are attached and the electric discharge will be sent through it at the appointed hour, accomplishing the purpose.

THE SENTINEL.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor and Proprietor.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

A PERFECTLY, AWFULLY LOVELY STORY.

There was once a perfectly modern girl,
With perfectly modern ways,
Who saw perfection in everything
That happened to meet her gaze.

Such perfectly lovely things she saw,
And perfectly awful, too,
That none would have dared to doubt her word
So perfectly, perfectly true.

The weather, she said, in summer time,
Was perfectly, awfully warm;
The winter was perfect, too, when there came
Some perfectly terrible storm.

She went to a perfectly horrid school,
In a perfectly horrid town;
And the perfectly hateful teachers there
Did things on perfectly blown.

Her lessons were perfectly, fearfully long,
But never were perfectly said,
And when she failed, as often she did,
Her face grew perfectly red.

The church she attended is perfectly mag—
With a perfectly heavenly spire,
And perfect crowds go there to hear
A perfectly stunning choir.

The latest style is perfectly sweet—
The last for perfection—and
The books she reads are perfectly good,
Good here, or else a demand.

A ride she took was perfectly grand,
In a perfectly gorgeous day,
With a perfectly lovely pair of bays,
Who behaved to pass that way.

The perfectly elegant falls she'd seen,
When on her way to the lakes,
And the graphic description she gave us all
Was simply a thing to make

The perfectly splendid foam dashed up,
In a perfectly killing way,
And the perfectly terrible waves came down
In a perfectly lovely pay.

I might go on with this "perfectly" poem
And write to the end of time,
But fearing to weary your patience out
Will bring to an end my rhyme.

THE WOUNDED HAND.

From a German Detective's Note-Book.

On the 23d of May, 1875, I stood in our office behind my desk, when our Chief entered the room with a letter in his hand and addressed me with an invitation to undertake the unraveling of a mystery which had baffled the local police at T. I consented, and departed for the scene of the crime which had been committed, much limited, however, as to the time I was allowed for spending on the case.

Two hundred and fifty thousand marks had been stolen from the widow of a well-connected man named Friedow. Her villa stood outside the gates of a small town, and the loss properly consisted chiefly in coupons and such valins, together with a little coin. Her habit was to keep all papers of importance, as well as money, in a chest of drawers beside her bed. Her sleeping-room was situated on the first floor, and faced the window which I looked out upon the yard. Her confidential friends had often advised Frau Friedow to keep her money at least in some safer place, but she had always resisted such counsel, and put no faith in banks or bankers. As a safe she had averred that if robbers did ever molest her, unless her trusty dog and her faithful Frederike, who was her factotum and the only man-servant on her property, could protect her, an iron box would avail little beyond, perhaps, detaining the thieves in laying hold of what they wanted.

On the night of the 7th of May the poor lady had put on the wrist at the time of retiring; to this flexible wires are attached and the electric discharge will be sent through it at the appointed hour, accomplishing the purpose.

"He wore a blue blouse and black hose?"

"Maybe; but it seems to me he had others with him or of its party."

"Very probably. Two others, I suppose?"

"This was how it was. One man came to me in the early dawning. I put him across. An hour or so later there came a second, and asked anxiously about the first. When I told him he was beyond he seemed content enough, and followed. The third, your friend with the blouse, asked if he were the first who wanted me that day. He asked me particularly about the two I had already rowed over, and then seemed right gay and jumped into the boat himself."

"Ah! One of the three carried a tin box?" I said, slipping a coin into my new acquaintance's palm.

"I never noticed," answered the girl. "But I saw that the third man carried a round bundle or parcel wrapped in a red handkerchief under his arm."

"Did he give you a good reward for taking him over.

"Nothing more than all the world—pfennings."

"With his right hand?"

"Why not?"

"Was it his right hand tied up?"

"Not that I saw. I only know he kept one hand in his pocket, whether his right or left I can't say now; but, alas! the result was simply nothing, nothing, nothing. I never before had been so utterly and completely taken in. Ordinarily I can tell by my father's face, however, seemed to me of great worth. Herr Bottcher thrives sleeping, sadly and was wont to rise often by night and pace up and down through the garden.

I lay lurking for two entire nights under bushes in this same plot, but during all those weary hours whoever did come to the place Herr Bottcher unfortunately did not, and in the garden I could find no trace of any hidden treasure, or likelihood of such. I fell into a deep sleep before. What could I do? Upon one side my absolute certainty of having tracked my man. On the other no earthly means of bringing home his guilt. If I only had even sufficient ground to demand a search through the rascal's house! but I had none. One afternoon I was walking up and down my room considering, when the post brought me a brief but concise and decisive dispatch from my Chief. "Return immediately, unless all matters are in train. Give up. Your presence here is necessary."

This order was like a thunderclap in my ears. My commanding officer was plainly displeased at my long delay. Should I simply throw the cards down or venture all on one trick this same evening, so as to be ready to depart to-morrow at furthest? I decided for the last alternative.

OUR RAPID LETTER.

New York, May 7, 1878.

Editor Sentinel:

Telegraph has been long commercial in throughout continental, and is extending and multiplying so much as to defy estimate that probably before a decade passes the whole face of the country will be covered by a network of wires. Recent experiments are said to have proved that practicable to dispense with the services of operators in the transmission of messages, and it is even claimed that a great deal has already been practically accomplished. A company has just been formed here with a large capital to establish lines in competition with those existing between the great cities and to undertake at cost prices all that the existing but improvements could justly accomplish. The managers of the new company that they can carry messages for less than half the rates now charged by the old companies, while the speed will be increased many fold.

Another recent event in the same direction is the recent establishment of a new ocean cables company which proposes to lay, during the summer, a new system to flash two thousand words a minute along the bed of the sea, over Europe to America or vice versa. All the promoters of these new enterprises are very positive and sanguine in their assurance, and even taking off the usual discounts from their figures, it seems probable that we are upon the eve of what may fairly be called a new telegraphic era.

A little more than a week ago, the new and very important branch of the East Side Elevated Railroad, running from City Hall Square to Chatham Square, was opened for travel, and only a day or two after this event, there occurred on this road the first really serious accident in the history of the elevated system. Two trains collided fortunately at a low rate of speed, but the engines were thrown off the track, and a number of persons were seriously injured. Every thing about the accident, except the occurrence itself, was extraordinary. For instance, no one was killed outright. It is said that no one would be injured so much as the engineer in the event of the two trains coming together, and yet he escaped almost without a scratch. Below with many cases of the accident was described as [illegible] and has created so much excitement that the company have determined to [illegible] switches altogether, and running trains at such times as a measure of safety.

That was a unique entertainment which was given by a prominent member of the Roosevelt family the other evening, and christened by the host "pot luck picnic." The distinguishing characteristic of the affair was that all its details were supposed to have been prepared by the ladies and gentlemen present. The invitation stated that "any guest failing within the scope or himself the divine confidence of cookery, is requested to supply the dish on which he or she excels. In several cases the recipient of the invitation was informed of the nature of the eatable which he was supposed to prepare. The result was a tremendous success. The company was large, well-appointed and hungry, and on a scene was naturally the object of the liveliest interest.

Mr. Roosevelt himself contributed a fine fish chowder, Mrs. J. C. Green ("Jennie June"), President of Sorosis, a noble plumb pudding, Gen. Meredith a ravishing peach cobbler, Joaquin Miller a delicious coffee, ex-Mayor Ely, oil cured as a sort of chief cook, and various other lesser notabilities had posthumous offerings upon the gastronomic altar. The whole affair was such a novelty and such a success that it is likely to set a very pleasant and enjoyable fashion.

One of the many queer incidents daily coming to the surface of New York life, occurred on Wall street a few days ago. A young woman stood on one of the corners of the street, lugging along one of the passers-by, and attracting much attention from the fact that she wore a veil over her face, and her every appearance of being a lady. After a while some one suspected her of being insane and caused her to be arrested and taken to a Police Court, where it came out that she was in fact a well known gentleman in good circumstances living in Harlem, who [illegible] dressed in her clothes and [illegible] her husband and children. French Costumes.

The first large importation of Parisian dresses consists entirely of short costumes for the street. These are made up principally of basques of most varied designs, with trimmed skirts representing an over-skirt drapery that is fastened permanently on the lower skirt. Other suits consist of but one piece, a la the back—whether a basque or princesse—is sewed to the back of the skirt, and the entire dress is put on at once. What constitutes the chief difference between the costumes of last season and those of the spring is the more elaborate draping in the way of shirred and folded fronts and softly puffed backs and hips that give the coquettish effect of panniers. The lower skirt remains narrow, has the same shaped gores, and is still simply trimmed with a narrow border flounce, unless on the front or side a deeper trimming is needed to meet the over-skirt. Box-pleated flounces, plain regular pleatings, clustered pleatings, and those with spaces between are all used. These are invariably made straight across the goods (the side and gathered flounces have for the moment disappeared); two to five rows of small knife-pleatings are also used, especially in satin and in striped goods.

The marked features in the new over-skirts are the shirred fronts and the soft bouffant back drapery. The shirring will extend in a broad cluster down the middle of the front of the apron, and also down each side of it. Sometimes the shirring gathers all the fullness of the apron near the top, and the ends then slope away like curtains, and are edged with fringe, or it may be they have a three-cornered revers added below on each side. In other cases the upper part of the front breadth is covered only by the basque, and the shirring gathers all the apron fullness very low down on the lower skirt. In still other models the shirring extends diagonally across the front, and the apron is very short, and is edged with a broad retrousse band of the striped or else brocaded trimming. These three-cornered mantle are seen on variations of the favorite washer-woman over-skirt, and are made more effective by being made of a fabric in strong contrast to the dress material. For instance, in the useful wool costumes called the Fair Maid of Perth suits, the soft sheer wool fabric of the dress is of a single color, such as cream, claret, olive, gendarme blue, black, or rifle green, while the basque, the pannier, and the retrousse bands are of gay plaids in the quaintest new combinations of colors. The apron of the over-skirt has soft folds across it, the broad plaid band is low down, and a panel on one side is set of the plaid in three length-wise pleats. The back is made bouffant by softly draped breadths caught up from the lower edge high on the sides and bordered with the plaid. The wool stuff used in these suits is as sheer as bunting, but is not wiry and harsh.

The basques are in endless variety, comprising the Pompadour basque with square front, the vest basque, either single or double-breasted, the pleated fronts, the postilion, the coat basque, the plastron, the fan back, the fichu front, and so on throughout the list. They are ugly uniform in being shorter than the plain reefers, which is not in harmony with the short bouffant skirts. The novelty in vests is a sort of ovals-shaped opening of the basque upon them, but every variety of the vest basque as now worn is seen in the newly-imported dresses. That which seems most popular dispenses with a separate vest, and has the vest material laid directly upon the lining with the fabric of the outside dress sloped away to show the vest beneath; and these are mostly stylish when lapped, as if double-breasted, and fastened by two rows of buttons, having three or four in each row. Shirred or pleated plastrons fill up the square Pompadour openings at the neck of other basques; in some cases these are sewed in with revers on each side, in others they are made separately like bibs. A great many kerchief collars like shirred fichus, or else merely folds, are made of the soft silk or satin trimming edged with fringe or lace as a finish for the neck of basques. The short side forms of the basque are almost universal. Postilion pleats and fans are quite flat in the back, and begin below the waist line usually. Plain or piped edges still prevail. Sleeves have very small neat cuffs, and sometimes a fan is set in the outer seam near the wrist.—Harper's Bazar.

The Earth's Independence of the Sun.

Prof. Pierce, of Harvard College, in a recent lecture in Boston, set forth some facts of interest in regard to the earth's independence of the sun's heat, which may be consoling to persons who accept the theory that the center of our solar system may lose its warmth. Could the organisms upon the earth withstand any great decrease of the sun's heat? To reply to this question, he said, we must remember that the earth's surface depends for its temperature not merely upon the heat which it receives, but also upon that which it is constantly radiating. With a small reduction of actual temperature vegetable organisms become less active, less carbonic acid is removed from the atmosphere, and it is wonderful how a small addition to the carbonic acid of the atmosphere increases the power of obstructing the passage of low forms of heat, and so diminishes the planet's radiation. Six per centum of carbonic acid nearly doubles the resistance of the atmosphere to radiation. If, then, the supply of heat from the sun were reduced one-half, the small increase of carbonic acid which would occur in the course of Nature would furnish the complete remedy for the loss, and restore the temperature needed for life. It is easy to see that this phenomenon would be accompanied by a more even and spring-like distribution of temperature over the earth's surface, which seems to accord with arctic geology. It may be, then, that a diminished sun is not an event to be dreaded. It is more probable, however, that the heat of the sun is still on the increase. After a time, it may be ages and ages, the sun will have cooled again, and will grow dim. But even then we shall have as much heat from it as have today the dwellers upon the outer planet of our system; as much light as the animals now have at the bottom of the ocean. We shall still have souls within our bodies and a Father in Heaven. Still further on the ideal history terminates in a total disappearance of all the material light of the present solar ring, chaos returns, ripe for a new nebular history and a new series of evolutions. But the veil of spiritual ideality can never be effaced.

Out-Door Exercise for Men and Women.

At the present time there are probably twenty men and more than double that number of women footing it around sawdust rings in different parts of the country. Every village has its walking club. College boys meet you with the precise gait of an aristocratic deer elbows out jerking along from the hips down; pretty girls no longer "skim with light haste and tread the daisied plain," but set down their boots scientifically on the bricks heel and toe, good for so many miles an hour.

All this, we are told, is physical culture. Perhaps it is. Any transient whim which will drag young people out of furnace-heated houses into the open air must benefit them physically to a certain degree. A young lad or girl, however, who would take the same amount of exercise while looking for stones, beetles, or weeds, or while playing a game, would reap double the advantage from it, as every tyro in physiology knows. The brain must be interested and amused while the limbs are at work, or the nerves suffer just in proportion as the muscles are strengthened. We need not flatter ourselves that we are becoming, as a people, anxious for physical culture. Amateurs are footing it just now, ticking off their miles and boasting of them, because it is the fashion of the hour, just as they sing Pinafore. As for the professional walkers, especially the poor women, who are advertising themselves in half the towns of the country, they are doing it simply to keep body and soul together. God help them! Nothing of late years gives a more pitiful insight into the condition of the laboring classes than the rush of women into every employment which promises to give them a living. We know of no more miserable or repugnant way for a modest woman to earn money than that of making herself a raree-show for days to a multitude of gaping and often half-drunken men, whose sole interest in her lies in watching the strength and endurance of her body, while she drags it around the ring through the foul air of breaths laden with tobacco and whisky, in a condition of nervous exhaustion so extreme that death is imminent at any moment. A week or two ago, as our readers know, a stroag man was driven mad by the strain, and attempted murder, and last Sunday a poor girl in Newark fell in epileptic fits, and barely escaped with life. If these poor creatures are driven to strain so hard to earn their living, let us pity them and help them if we choose, but in the name of common sense let us not talk of physical culture in the matter.

It is quite true that our women need more out-door exercise. They are, as a rule, bilious, neuralgic and thin-blooded. But it is not their muscles, but their nerves and digestion, which need repair. What they want, therefore, is fresh air, amusement, interest in out-door things, and gentle exercise —not the overwork of long, objectless tramps. Precisely the same rule applies to American men. Their brains need rest and recreation quite as much as their bodies do work. It is true they may gain a good many hints as to the value of orderly, self-control in eating, fresh air and clean bodies from these professional trainers. Whisky and tobacco-smoke had much to do with the defeats at Gilmore's Garden. But the advantage of walking does not lie in making so many miles an hour, except to men who mean to earn their living by it. If the college boys whose souls are wrung with envy of Rowell would spend the coming vacation in making pedestrian tours through the mountains, leaving their whisky flasks at home, sleeping on the ground, cooking for themselves, finding new fun and adventures every day, they would come back sounder in general health, and certainly more vigorous in mind and morals than if they had walked for the Astley belt and won it.—*N. PACIFIC coast whalers set forth from their winter quarters early in the spring, provisioned for a cruise of at least six months. The crews number about thirty-five men, a force sufficient to man four or five boats. The number of boats carried depends on the locality of the hunting ground and the nature of the whales to be captured. In the extreme north whales never attack a boat, but in the south they do so frequently. The best of the weapons carried is the patent harpoon-gun, which is darted from the hand, and explodes after striking the whale, causing instant death when it enters a vital part.—N. Y. Sun.

Do Opossums "Play 'Possum?"

In order to test this supposed habit of the opossum, I have sought out their hiding-places in several instances, and endeavored to make them "show off" in this manner. In one instance a large male opossum was captured in an ordinary box-trap set for rabbits. On killing the lid the animal was found to be curled up into nearly as globular a form as it was possible to assume. Being disturbed, it slowly raised its head, opened its mouth widely, but did not offer to bite, and in this position quietly awaited coming events. After some five minutes of mutual staring, the opossum closed its mouth and slowly restored its head to a more easy position, and even closed one eye, as though the other was all that was necessary to note what might occur. On being roughly handled, and given several pushes with a stick, it opened its mouth widely and protested against disturbance by a low, hissing sound, but did not uncoil its body. If the animal, at this time, realized all the circumstances of its being a prisoner, it certainly did not fear death, for it made no effort to escape, which the fear of death would cause it to do, since it was in no way disabled. After waiting long and seeing no sign of feigning unconsciousness, I turned to a provoking indifference, I walked off some distance, where I could see the dog, which I left open, but to which I was unnoticed by the opossum. Fully five minutes elapsed before I saw any movement on the part of the animal, and then it was a very gradual uncoiling of the body, a protracted yawn, a stretching of the limbs, and then standing up, he looked about and very deliberately walked off. I ran toward him, when he quickened his pace, but was soon overtaken. On seizing him by the tail he crouched down, partially coiled his body and spread his jaws to their utmost. When struck with severe blows about his head (although careful not to strike him), the animal's head drooped, sank down, and his eyes closed, but this was not a feigned act. The breathing was affected, but not suppressed, the entire temperature of the body perceptibly lowered, I judged, and it was, as I believe, a fainting, not feigning act, a temporary paralyzation of the whole body. Other trials, and for the time being absolute unconsciousness. Furthermore, as in fainting, a touch of cold water has the power of readily restoring the animal. I have made scores of experiments with opossums in this supposed way, and in no instance have the results varied from the above. As to the position usually assumed when an opossum is supposed to be feigning death, it is that which the animal always assumes when sleeping, and, further, is that best calculated to prevent injury from blows, as the head and breast are partially protected. The opossum is superlatively lazy and passive, but is not at all intelligent, when compared with the raccoon, otter, muskrat or marmot, and I believe the supposed habit of feigning death when captured by man to be attributable to fear and not cunning. Surely, it is a merciful provision that destroys, without pain, all sensation in animals about to be torn in pieces.—Science News.

Poets Laureate.

The poets laureate of England make up a motley and curious literary history. A volume has just been published in London which relates with minuteness and accuracy the history of this office, which for 250 years it has pleased the Kings of England to fill with some duly-appointed poets. Of these laureates there have been fourteen, and the chronicler points out that three of them have been chosen from the first rank of genius, each the most illustrious poet of his age; that three others were learned and dignified writers of great distinction, while one was a man of some genius, but of low instincts and degraded manners. During the careers of Addison, Pope and Dryden the representative of English poetry, for a period of twenty-three years, was one Nahum Tate, who "Travestied the Psalms, adapted Shakespeare, stole from Milton, wrote verses for Purcell," and who, in spite of his association with illustrious men, did not rise, even for a moment his inherent vulgarity of mind," or "polish his uncouth and debased style." During another twenty-three years, in which Byron, Coleridge, Scott, Moore, Campbell, Wordsworth and Cowper were enriching literature with their master works, the nominal head of English literature was one Henry James Pye. Henry James Pye was a Captain in the Berks Militia, and a Justice of the Peace Magistrate, but "incapable of stringing four rhymes together without an unpardonable fault of style." There was ridicule heaped upon him from many quarters, but in spite of it he went on "patiently fabricating his New Year odes, and his birthday odes, a pitiful series of forty-six, unheeded and apparently unconscious of the chorus of laughter." Early in the eighteenth century the laureateship fell to the lot of the libertine Lawrence Rusden, than whom the history of poetry does not present a "figure more piteously mean, more ridiculously obscure." There was not even in his own day a vision to credit "this drunken parson and fool of the laurel." Finally, in 1730, he resigned the entagled laurel and his life "in a bout of drunkenness," and was succeeded by Colley Cibber. William Davenant, who was laureate after Ben Jonson, went into exile during the civil wars, and in 1650 was captured by Parliamentary cruisers at the head of a flotilla bound for Virginia. His life was, however, spared, and he owed it to no less ogalnogt a Republican and poet than Milton. The greatest name with which the office has been identified in England is John Dryden, and his is the only case of the abdication, voluntary or enforced, of an English laureate. Since the time of Pye the office has regained its lost dignity, for Wordsworth, Southey and Tennyson have filled it in succession. It was Shadwell, the successor of Dryden, who inaugurated the anniversary ode on the birthday of the King—a production which was always tedious, and a complete collection of which would prove "the most baffling series of works that one ever presented to a patient reader." Of the fourteen laureates, only five rest in Westminster Abbey, and they are Jonson, Davenant, Dryden, Rowe and Cibber.—N. Y. Tribune.

Age of the World.

Geologists, astronomers and physicists alike have hitherto been baffled in their attempts to set up any satisfactory kind of chronometer which will approximately measure geological time, and has given some clew to the antiquity of our globe. It is therefore worth noting that Mr. Mellard Reade, of Liverpool, has lately contributed to the Royal Society a very suggestive paper, in which he endeavors to grapple with the question by employing the limestone beds of the earth's crust as an index of geological time. Limestones have been in course of formation from the earliest known geological periods, but it would appear that the later-formed strata are more calcareous than the earlier, and that there has, in fact, been a practically progressive increase of calcareous matter. The very extensive deposition of carbonate of lime over wide areas of the ocean-bottom at the present day is sufficiently attested by the recent soundings of the Challenger. According to the author's estimate, the sedimentary crust of the earth is at least one mile in average actual thickness, of which probably one-tenth consists of calcareous matter. In seeking the origin of this calcareous matter, it is assumed that the primitive rocks of the original crust were of the nature of granitic or basaltic rocks. By the disintegration of such rocks, calcareous and other sedimentary deposits have been formed. The amount of limestone in waters which daily and hourly made up of granites and basalts is found, by a comparison of analyses, to be on an average about 20 parts in 100,000 parts of water. It is then assumed that the exposed areas of igneous rocks, taking an average throughout all geological time, will bear to the exposures of sedimentary rocks a ratio of about one to nine. From these and other data Mr. Reade concludes that the elimination of the calcareous matter now found in all the sedimentary strata must have occupied at least 600,000,000 of years. This, therefore, represents the minimum age of the world. The author infers that the formation of the Laurentian, Cambrian and Silurian strata must have occupied about 200,000,000 of years; the old red sandstone, the carboniferous, and the poikilitic systems another 200,000,000; and all the other strata, the remaining 200,000,000. Mr. Reade is, therefore, led to believe that geological time has been enormously in excess of the limits urged by certain physicists, and that it has been ample to allow for all the changes which, on the hypothesis of the evolution, have occurred in the organic world.—Acadamy.

Distress in Berlin.

Probably in no city in Europe is there so much financial and social distress to-day as in Berlin. The militarism which Germany exacted from France after the war and its becoming the Imperial Capital with it, was thought greatly benefit the city; but just the contrary has happened.

In the last eight years, steadily to have grown from bad to worse. Apart from the number of unemployed persons registered by the limestone beds of the and hundreds of new ones have been made by speculation, and there is more or less suffering among all classes. Well-educated citizens who before the war had incomes of 80,000 to 90,000 marks, who fared sumptuously and were among the envied of society, are now impoverished and compelled to earn a pittance by acting as legal copyists. Price of living have rapidly increased, and Berlin is now one of the most expensive and least satisfactory of the world's capitals. This is partly owing to the great increase of population and the difficulty of getting houses at anything like reasonable rates. There are now, it is reported, more than 1,000,000 souls in the city—an augmentation since 1871 of 200,000, and since 1861 of 350,000. The most excessive of the enormous rents vast numbers have been driven to abide under ground, fully one-tenth of the entire population, or 100,000, being crowded together in cellars in a way that is most hurtful to them physically and morally. The condition of things, judging from private letters, is very painful, and deteriorating rather than improving, and the political troubles add materially to the prevalent distress. Frenchmen who want their revenge should study the present social status of Berlin.—N. Y. Times.

The Battle of Bells Isle.

The chieftainship was first held by Keys, but when he went outside he appointed Sergt. A. R. Hill, of the One Hundredth O. V. I.—now a resident of Wauseon, O.—his successor. Hill was one of the notables of that immense throng. A great broad-shouldered giant, in the prime of his manhood—the beginning of his thirtieth year—he was as good-natured as big, and as mild-mannered as brave. He spoke slowly, softly, and with a slightly rustic twang, that was very tempting to a class of sharps to take him up for a "lubberly greeny." The man who did so usually repented his error in sackcloth and ashes.

Hill first came into prominence as the victor in the most stubbornly-contested fight in the prison history of Belle Isle. When the squad of the One Hundredth Ohio (captured at Limestone Station, East Tennessee, in September, 1863), arrived on Belle Isle, a certain Jack Oliver, of the Nineteenth Indiana, was the undisputed Emperor of the island. He did not bear his blushing honors modestly; few kings of muscle can or do. The possession of a right arm capable of knocking an ordinary man into the indefinite locality known as "the middle of next week" is something the possessor can as little resist showing as can a girl her first solitaire ring. To know that one can certainly strike a disagreeable fellow out of time is pretty sure to breed a desire to do that thing whenever occasion serves. Jack Oliver, who did not feel let his biceps rust in inaction, but thrashed everybody on the island whom he thought needed it, and then he rose up to those who should be included in this class widened daily, until it began to appear that he would soon feel it his duty to let no unwhipped man escape, but pound everybody on the island.

Hill's military genius led him to abuse a rather elderly man belonging to Hill's mess. As he fired off his tirade of customedly, Hill said, with more than the usual "sot" ruralityy—

"Mister—I—don't—think—it—jus—right—for—a—young—man—to—call—an—old—one—such—bad—names."

Jack Oliver turned on him savagely.

"Well! maybo you want to take it up?"

The grin on Hill's face looked still more confident, as he answered with gentle deliberation:

"Well,—mister,—I—don't—go—around—a—hunting—fightings,—but—I—don't—take—care—of—all—that's—sent—me?"

Jack foamed; but his fiercest blusher could not give him the courage to withdraw from Hill's face, nor provoke a change in the calm slowness of his speech.

It was evident that nothing would do but a battle-royal, and Jack had sense enough to see that the imperturbable rustic was likely to give him a job of some difficulty. He went off and came back with his whole Hill's comrades of the One Hundredth gathered around to insure him fair play. Hill, without removing a garment, said, as he surveyed him with a mocking smile:

"Mister—you—seem—to—be—one—of—them—that—do—keep—their—word."

Jack roared out with an oath:

"I'll make you particklee before I get through with you. Now how shall we settle this? Regular standup-and-knock, or rough and tumble?"

If anything, Hill's face was more vacantly serene, and his tones blander than ever, as he answered:

"Stand—as—any—gait—that—suits—you,—mister;—I—guess—I—will—be—able—to—keep—up—with—you."

They closed. Hill feinted with his left, and, as Jack unscrewed to guard, he caught him fairly on the lower left ribs, by a blow from his mighty right fist, that sounded—as one of the bystanders expressed it—"like striking a hollow log with a maul."

The color in Jack's face paled. He did not seem to understood how he had laid himself open to such a blow, and repeated the same mistake, receiving again a sounding blow in the short ribs. This taught him nothing either, for again he opened his guard in response to a feint, and again taught a blow on his luckless left ribs that drove the blood from his face and the breath from his body. He reeled back among his supporters for an instant to breathe. Recovering his wind, he dashed at Hill, feinted strongly with his right, but delivered a terrible kick in the latter's abdomen. Both closed and fought savagely at half-arms' length for an instant, during which Hill struck Jack so fairly in the mouth as to break out threefront teeth, which he lustily swallowed. Then they clenched and struggled to throw each other. Hill's superior strength and skill crushed his opponent to the ground, and he fell upon him. As they grappled there one of Jack's followers sought to aid his leader by catching Hill by the hair, intending to kick him in the face. In an instant he was knocked down by a stalwart member of the One Hundredth, and then literally lifted out of the ring by kicks.

Jack was soon so badly beaten as to be unable to cry "enough." One of his friends did that service for him, the fight ceased, and thenceforth Mr. Oliver resigned his pugilistic crown and retired to the shades of privatelife. He died of scurvy and diarrhea some months afterward in Andersonville.—Toledo Blade.

PUFF PASTE.—A quarter pound of flour; quarter pound of butter; yolk of one egg; a pinch of salt; a few drops of lemon juice; a gill of cold water. Place the flour on a board; put the yolk in a basin and add to it the salt and lemon juice; to this add the water; then mix the flour with it all in a firm dough; when the dough is well kneaded roll it thinly out on the board, which must be kept well floured; place the butter in the center of the dough, and fold it seven times, always allowing an interval after rolling for it to cool before folding it; having folded the dough seven times the rounds may be cut out of it; when cut the dough should be half an inch thick, after cutting out the rounds or cakes, smaller rounds may be cut out of the ones already cut by boiling and then stamping up, the dough when the dough is well kneaded with a round cutter and leaving them to be taken out when cooked; place them on a slightly-floured baking tin and put them in the oven for ten minutes.

—Sour Bratzen.—Take eight pounds of dump, not too lean; dry the meat with a cloth; mix a pint of vinegar with the same quantity of water; put the beef in a deep earthenware pan, and pour the vinegar and water over it; leave the meat in the mixture for two hours, turning it from time to time; take it out, and rub it well in with two tablespoonfuls of salt, and a tablespoonful of pepper; cut in strips a half pound of fat smoked bacon; take a baking pan, and cover the bottom with the strips of bacon; cutin slices three large carrots, three onions, a stick of celery, one bay leaf, twelve cloves, and grate a small piece of lemon or orange peel; put the beef in the pan on the strips; sprinkle the herbs, etc., over the vegetables; add two large tablespoonfuls of brown sugar; cover the beet with what remains of the bacon strips; add a pint vinegar and water, and bake slowly for four hours. As it evaporates in baking, pour from time to time some warm water into the pan, not quite all on the beef. May be eaten hot or cold. The sauce may be strained or not.

—Mr. Joseph Jefferson, during his recent visit to his Orange Grove plantation, has been actively engaged in applying to practice a cherished theory—that every country possesses sufficient material for its own fences. He set to work to prove it by erecting for each side of his fence bushes three feet in width, divided into five layers at an angle of seventy-five degrees. The soil from beneath the sod exactly fills the space between the erected sods, leaving a three-foot ditch on each side. On the top of this sod-and-soil fence, which is four and one-half feet at the base, and three feet high, he plants cuttings of the Macartney rose, which are protected by a panel of boards. This fence, while within the reach of any man who will shoulder his spade and work, possesses the advantages of an impassable barrier, of permanence, of not needing repair, of drainage, and of being a most beautiful ornament. Mr. Jefferson will soon have inclosed a section of his plantation containing 2,600 acres, and at one-half the cost of a snake fence. Without being oversanguine as to its rapid adoption, we feel safe in saying that it is the most economical and beautiful fence in the Southern States, and destined to come into general use.—*New Iberia (La.) When and Where to Apply Wood Ashes.

Wood ashes, among the best of saline manures, and also among the most economical, are coming to be more and more appreciated every year. Farmers now, as a rule, husband every pound made on the farm, and buy them wherever they can be procured at a reasonable rate. The time has gone by for changing ashes from good hard wood for a few pounds of soap.

Leached ashes, while less valuable, contain all the elements of the unreached, having been deprived only of a part of their potash and lime. Almost any benefit all soils not already rich in the principles they contain, and may be drilled in with roots and grain, sown broadcast on meadows or pastures, or mixed with the muck-heap.

The quantity of ashes to be applied to the acre depends, as does that of all fertilizers, on the character of the soil and crop cultivated. Crops which exhaust the salts, as potatoes, turnips and all roots, clover, lucern, peas, beans and the grasses, are benefited by such. The crops named will do well under an application of ashes with bone-dust, and their effects are also strengthened when mixed with gypsum. Light soils call for light dressings, say from ten to fourteen bushels of unleached and twice that quantity of leached ashes per acre. Rich lands or clays bear heavier dressings. Repeated dressings of ashes like repeated dressings of lime or gypsum, without a corresponding addition of vegetable or barnyard manures, are not admissible, for they will evidently exhaust lands when applied alone. Where the entire surface of the soil is covered with vegetable growth, either of the three materials mentioned acts with great effect. For this reason ashes may be applied unmixed with other fertilizers to meadow lands for a longer time than to any other crop.

In reply to questions asked at the Elmira (N. Y.) Farmers' Club in regard to the value of leached ashes and the best manner of applying them to general crops, as corn, wheat and oats, the following information was gained: Leached ashes vary so much in their character that no precise estimate of their value can be made. Heavy clay is liable to be injuriously compacted by liberal dressings of ashes, leached or unleached, unless the land is soil, in which case the ashes act on the surface tend to increase the crop of grass. The safest and best use of leached ashes on most kinds of soil is spreading them on the meadow or pasture. Working them into land on which potatoes are to be planted in the same season is also a good way to use them. Good wood ashes make a valuable dressing for wheat land and for corn, but the leached ashes are uncertain in their character to recommend for such use.

Coal ashes are inferior in quality to those from wood or vegetables, but are nevertheless of value and are to be applied to the soil in a similar manner, at the rate of half an inch thick, after cutting out the rounds or cakes, smaller rounds may be cut out of the ones already cut by boiling and then stamping up, the dough when the dough is well kneaded with a round cutter and leaving them to be taken out when cooked; place them on a slightly-floured baking tin and put them in the oven for ten minutes.

—Sour Bratzen.—Take eight pounds of dump, not too lean; dry the meat with a cloth; mix a pint of vinegar with the same quantity of water; put the beef in a deep earthenware pan, and pour the vinegar and water over it; leave the meat in the mixture for two hours, turning it from time to time; take it out, and rub it well in with two tablespoonfuls of salt, and a tablespoonful of pepper; cut in strips a half pound of fat smoked bacon; take a baking pan, and cover the bottom with the strips of bacon; cutin slices three large carrots, three onions, a stick of celery, one bay leaf, twelve cloves, and grate a small piece of lemon or orange peel; put the beef in the pan on the strips; sprinkle the herbs, etc., over the vegetables; add two large tablespoonfuls of brown sugar; cover the beet with what remains of the bacon strips; add a pint vinegar and water, and bake slowly for four hours. As it evaporates in baking, pour from time to time some warm water into the pan, not quite all on the beef. May be eaten hot or cold. The sauce may be strained or not.

—Mr. Joseph Jefferson, during his recent visit to his Orange Grove plantation, has been actively engaged in applying to practice a cherished theory—that every country possesses sufficient material for its own fences. He set to work to prove it by erecting for each side of his fence bushes three feet in width, divided into five layers at an angle of seventy-five degrees. The soil from beneath the sod exactly fills the space between the erected sods, leaving a three-foot ditch on each side. On the top of this sod-and-soil fence, which is four and one-half feet at the base, and three feet high, he plants cuttings of the Macartney rose, which are protected by a panel of boards. This fence, while within the reach of any man who will shoulder his spade and work, possesses the advantages of an impassable barrier, of permanence, of not needing repair, of drainage, and of being a most beautiful ornament. Mr. Jefferson will soon have inclosed a section of his plantation containing 2,600 acres, and at one-half the cost of a snake fence. Without being oversanguine as to its rapid adoption, we feel safe in saying that it is the most economical and beautiful fence in the Southern States, and destined to come into general use.—*New Iberia (La.) —Tennessee has a school population of 448,917; of this number 112,109 are colored children. There are 2,346 schools in the State; 1,441 of these are for colored pupils. The average attendance last year was 172,198. Of the 5,592 teachers employed, 1,135 are colored. The school expenditures last year were $813,321.27.

—A member of the Baltimore School Board advocates the ventilation of school-rooms by means of boards from twelve to fifteen inches wide, and fastened on the inside to the window frame, the window to be raised from four to six inches. The pure air will be forced out by means of fan ventilators placed in the roof, and having proper connections therewith.

—A colored preacher in Kentucky called on a tobacco dealer for a subscription in aid of the church over which he presided, and when the dealer said he ought to go to work and earn something for the church instead of begging, offered to work if the dealer would employ him. The dealer agreed; the negro preacher laid aside his clerical coat and labored assiduously in the factory all day, and at sunset received a $50 check in payment.

The total of the foreign staff is 39. Of the native staff, 37. There are 18 organized churches, 41 preaching places, 3 mission stations, and 394 scholars in the schools. The number of members is 970. More than 200 were admitted on profession in 1878, and 55 infants were baptized.

Important to Farmers.

In these days when almost any man, be he merchant, farmer, or sagbutter, sits down and deliberately counts the cost of running his business or farm, insurance is a very important item in his calculation, and naturally he asks himself, Is it best? Will I find a company offering the best inducements, combined with perfect security?

Amongst the many annual reports made to insurance departments, in compliance with law, by the various insurance companies of our country, we would notice the twentieth annual statement of the Aetna Insurance Company of Chicago, which shows a degree of success and solidity of management highly gratifying and satisfactory. In the States of Illinois, Missouri and Indiana, its cash receipts for premiums during the year 1878 are in excess of any other company doing business in said States.

Of the twelve companies reporting to the Illinois department whose premium receipts exceed $75,000 for 1878, the following is the list of their profits:

American,	of Chicago,	yield	$201,822 65
Aetna,	of New York,	"	184,152 39
Ætna,	of Hartford,	"	184,020 49
Hartford,	of Hartford,	"	167,781 97
Home,	of New York,	"	165,000 00
Phœnix,	of New York,	"	126,924 29
Phœnix,	of Chicago,	"	97,983 16
Phœnix,	of Hartford,	"	97,983 16
Continental,	of New York,	"	91,675 00
Fire Association,	of Philadelphia,	"	91,478 99
Germania,	of New York,	"	87,000 00
Imperial,	of London,	"	75,000 00

In consideration of the above facts, cannot be too strongly encouraged to follow the practice of collecting and reducing to ashes all the rubbish of the farm not otherwise available, such as brush, old wood, everything which will burn, and which encumbers the place as useless matter. Burnt earth is not only manure in itself, but is most useful to mix with artificial fertilizers which commonly be easily distributed alone or too strong to sow among seed unmixed with other material.—N. Y. World.

Two Dollars and Fifty Cents a Week in England.

Mr. Thurstone, a son of William Thurstone, the Secretary of the Buffalo Board of Trade, arrived from England yesterday with his bride, a blooming English girl. He reports "awful" poverty in Liverpool.

"A good farm laborer," he says, "can earn only two dollars and fifty cents a week, and out of this he has to pay house rent and support a family."

"What can be feed his family on?" I inquired.

"Oh, they eat American cheese, coarse bread, a very little American bacon (once a day), turnips, and mangel wurzels, a vegetable like a beet, formerly fed to horses."

"What do the farmers raise?" I asked.

"They have stopped raising wheat. They can't raise wheat and compete with American wheat, which is put down in Liverpool at one dollar and ten cents per bushel. They can't raise bacon and compete with American bacon, and they can't raise cheese.'

"Then what do they raise?"

"Well, they can raise coarse, bulky vegetables like beets, carrots and cabbages—things which cannot be transported across the ocean, and which do not come in competition with the American products mentioned. Then they make fine cheese, worth fifteen cents per pound, and fine butter, worth thirty-five cents. Pork and wheat, the two staples, cannot be profitably raised now by the English farmer. And if the Americans go to making fine cream cheese and sending it to England, they will stop the English farmer from making that article. The fact is, with freights seventy-five cents per hundred from Chicago to Liverpool, the English farmer will be ruined. They cannot farm on their lands, worth from two to three hundred dollars per acre, and compete with the Western farmer, whose land is worth from ten dollars to fifty dollars per acre."

"Do the people see anything ahead?"

"No. Their only hope is to emigrate to America. America is ruining England. Now, take the question of straw. The farmers stopped raising wheat. This cut off the straw supply, and now there is a straw famine there, and compressed straw and hay are actually being shipped from the Continent. Everything coming from America is cheap. American oysters are cheaper than English oysters."

"Did you see American beef there?"

"Yes, everywhere. It is a common joke for an Englishman to say:

"'This is some of our best English beef, sir—from Illinois,' and 'How do you like our good old Irish bacon—from Ohio?'"—N. Y. Cor. Cincinnati Enquirer.

THE Batavia (N. Y.) Advocate says a printer in that village has invented an apparatus for hatching chickens, and has brought it to such perfection that "the enormous saving of 75 per cent. is effected in the cost of hatching chickens—the absolute cost being but one-fourth of one cent per chick."

A Plucky Little Indian Boy.

From the Cheboygan Observer.

A house belonging to Capt. Bonnell, of Mackinac, situated on the north shore, near the Scammans, was burned last week Wednesday night. The house was used during the summer in Capt. Bonnell's extensive fish business, and his "plant" was largely stored there during the winter. To guard against fire and thieves an Indian was employed to live in the house. In the early part of the week the Indian went to Mackinac, leaving his family at home. He started back Wednesday, going as far as his father in law's, which is about 5 miles from the wareroom. Here he found his wife. She had locked her three children, the oldest a boy of 8 years, in the house. The Indian and his wife remained at her father's all night, and during the next day. The horses got on fire Wednesday night. The interior not being able to get out of the doors, and the windows being nearly covered, was only able to escape by jumping on ice, which fortunately had been left in the house, and chopping his way out at a window. He then took the young children out. They remained about the house until morning, when they put their feet up in bonnets to keep from freezing. They waited until noon the next day for their parents to come, but doing so the little fellow put the two smaller ones out a hind shed and hauled them down to their grandfather's. Capt. Bennett's loss on building and contents will aggregate about $5000.

MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

—Readers of Darwin's "The Descent of Man" may remember that he asserts the probability of the posterior or wisdom teeth tending to become rudimentary in the more civilized races of man. Prof. Mantegazza, from the study of 1,249 skulls, of which 841 represented highly civilized races and 277 modern inferior races, and the remaining 128 being Roman, Etruscan, Phœnician and other Nations of antiquity, reaches conclusions which strongly confirm the above-quoted remark of Darwin.

—According to the London Artisan, engineers and users of steam-power do not sufficiently realize the importance of supplying the cylinder with unreduced elastic steam, or so many badly-protected pipes would not be in use—many of them actually inclined toward the cylinder, as though to get as little power, instead of as much, as possible from a given quantity of water and fuel. Another cause of much waste of steam is in the unclothed cylinder; for every 1,000 cubic feet of steam, 300 are consumed in keeping the cylinder warm, and heating the water which is the result of condensation in the cylinder.

—The operation of giving a smooth surface to shot and shell by the use of the lathe has been practically abandoned at the Government works, England. The method of casting these projectiles of exact size and smooth exterior was first carried out on account of the expense which would be saved by the abolition of turning, but a still greater advantage has been found in the superior hardness of the unturned shells—the one-tenth of an inch of the outer skin which it has been usual to turn off the Palliser projectiles, for example, being equal in strength to one-third of the interior surface. By reducing the thickness of the walls, the shell is thus enabled to contain a much larger bursting charge without any diminution of penetrative power, and the whole mass proves more cohesive and serviceable in what may be regarded as its natural skin, that is the case after the material and chemical changes which are wrought in its constitution by the friction of the lathe.

—A correspondent of the London Times, at St. Petersburg, states that in preparing the famous Russian leather for book-binding, the hides to be tanned are first laid to soak for three days and nights in a solution of potash to which some quicklime has been added. The potash used is made of the tree called in Russ lim, the elm: it is not purified, so that it is of a brown color and earthy appearance—about twelve poods of this, each pood being equal to thirty-six English pounds, and two poods of lime, serving for 100 skins. By means of their tongues, when the causticity of the alkali is found weak, a longer solution is allowed. When the skins are taken out, they are taken to the river and left under water for a day and a night. Next a vedro of dog's dung is boiled in as much water as will soak fifty skins, the latter being put into this solution when it is at the heat which the skins can bear, and in this they remain one day and night. The skins are then scored up water-tight, about one-third of what the skins will contain is then filled up with leaves and small twigs, chopped together, of the plant called tolokuanka, or bearberry, and the skin filled with water; they are now laid one on the other in a large trough, with heavy stones upon them so as to press the infusion through the pores of the skin in about four hours. After this, the skins are taken to the river and washed, and are ready for the dyeing, the whitest skins being laid aside for the red and yellow leather.

Jaded Heads.

The school of popular morality which ruled a generation ago is responsible for no little mischief; and its teachings have not yet quite gone out of fashion. It knew but one virtue—unceasing application to work or study; but one sin—the neglect of business for recreation. For a man to stop work to rest himself or to play was a symptom of inherent laziness, or, worse, an inclination toward moral, mental or physical dissipation. Untiring industry, even unnecessary, was raised to the topmost pinnacle of social virtue; and to say that a man "died in the harness" was to pronounce the highest eulogium.

A reaction has taken place; yet the fashion of overdoing still compels many a man to toil on unnecessarily after the physical and mental strain has become all but intolerable; and too often, by the time a man has trained a young family to life conditions which only a large income can sustain, he breaks down and leaves his children to bear the brunt of a poverty made tenfold more severe than it otherwise would be by the daintiness of their previous living. And even when the hybrid-known merchant or professional man leaves his family a competence, they are very apt to inherit an ill-bred aneed and ill-nourished nervous system, which makes a possession and sustained enjoyment of life an impossibility.

In a recent lecture in this city, Dr. C. R. Agnew said that if there is more nervous disease in this country than elsewhere, it is because the average American constitution is unequal to be able to do anything. Men should know on what points they are ignorant, and so escape many damaging strains. Mental application does not weaken the brain. It strengthens it, if not carried to the length at which wholesome food and plenty of sleep fail to refresh it. Never in any age, said Dr. Agnew in another connection, have man's faculties been so taxed as now; and the great problem is for each man to do his share of the world's work and keep well. The civilization of today does not call for any faculties that a man does not possess; but it calls upon him to use in the best manner the faculties he has and learn how to bear the strain of living.

One of the first and most imperative symptoms that the strain of living is becoming too great is the jaded head, which Dr. Agnew described as one that cannot be depended upon for a long stretch of work, that grows weary prematurely, that has to be coaxed from the pillow in the morning, and that does not force the work of the day cheerfully. "There are more of such heads than might be supposed. They are found in every rank of life; but chiefly among persons of sedentary pursuits, and among both sexes, and almost all ages above fourteen. Generally the early symptoms of the malady is discomfort during headwork in the back of the head and in the upper part of the spinal region. He is a happy man who meets this symptom with rest, and seeks in sunlight and fresh air some fresh investments for his nervous system, and drops every habit that does not do him positive good. If he takes to artificial stimulants for relief, he will begin a career which, soon or later, will place him among the incurables, or bring him to an untimely end. Alcohol and all sleep-producing drugs are dangerous in the highest degree; for they mask the malady, without curing it. No organ in the human body is so abused as the brain, and no organ is so well fitted for daily use. Still, the brain is not so susceptible to disease as some suppose. It was probable there was not a man present who had not during the day abused his brain by overwork, anger, chicanery, alcohol, fuss, hurry, too little sleep, too much sleep, by indolence, by not studying to be quiet, by not doing his own business, by attempting to do something beyond his reach, by attempting to do something for which he had not been sufficiently educated, by carrying an evil conscience, or by the unmanly strain of trying to outdo his neighbor. The remedy of the jaded head is the giving up of all habits which cannot be defended by the highest kind of reasoning; the careful differentiating of each man of his ability to stand work; the avoidance of doing anything for which a man has no adequate education; rest, recreation, and the keeping up of the tissue-building powers by wholesome food."—Scientific American.

How He Got Back His Presents.

A London dressmaker recently had her lover arrested for taking from her certain presents which he had made to her. She stated in court that she had been engaged to the prisoner for several months, and on the previous Saturday evening had met him by appointment. He took her into a jeweler's shop, saying he would buy her a chain, and selected one for £5 15s. He asked her to see how it would look on her watch, and she detached the latter from her own chain, and he tried it on the counter. He then asked to see some wedding-rings, and at his request she took a gold keeper from her finger, and tried on three or four weddling-rings, one of which fitted her. Remarking that it looked very nice on her finger, he put the keeper in his pocket, and purchased a pin for himself for 5s 6d, saying that would satisfy the jeweler for his trouble. The dressmaker asked the prisoner for the watch and keeper, but he refused to give them to her, remarking that they were his property, and taking her into the jeweler's as he had done was the only means he had of getting them. She gave him into custody. She did not know whether she could call herself engaged to the prisoner still. He had given her the watch and the ring, but had never asked for them back. She had a little quarrel with him a month previously, but that was made up. The Magistrate observed that he did not think any jury would convict the prisoner of stealing the things, and therefore the man must be discharged. The dressmaker left the court, remarking that it was a disgraceful thing.—Cor. N. Y. Tribune.

A Senile Son.

There was buried from St. Rose Church, yesterday, a young man named Peter Happ, a street-car driver. He was the only support of an aged father and mother, and the privation and suffering which he endured that they might have a home, with such necessaries of life as his scanty wages would provide, were doubtless the cause of his death. The family, consisting of the two old people and Peter, who was twenty-six years of age, lived in Washington street, near Front. His father is crippled and infirm. The mother was only able to perform such light labor as was necessary in the care of their little household. All the money that came into their home was provided by the son from his small earnings. He paid their house-rent, supplied them with food, clothing, fuel—everything. During the past winter, and up to a short time ago, when he was prostrated by the disease—quick consumption—which terminated his life, he was in the employ of the Eighth-street car line in the capacity of a driver. Those who know him speak of him as a hero who died that his father and mother might live. His wages were not sufficient to provide all with the necessaries of life, and he chose that he himself should be the one to suffer most. During some of the severest weather of the past winter he wore neither overcoat nor underclothing, and thus contracted the cold that soon resulted in his death. It is a rule of the company that a driver must be ready to go out with his car at twenty minutes before six o'clock each morning or receive no car that day. Although young Happ had to walk from his home in Fulton to Price's Hill, a distance of four miles and a half, for sixty consecutive mornings during the cold weather of last winter, he never missed a car. It is another rule of the company that, when not on duty, a driver shall not ride on a car without paying regular fare. This rule and his poverty necessitated young Happ walking home every night after leaving his car. This made him a daily walk of nine miles, and this in addition to the fifteen hours that car-drivers are required to work each day. Standing on a car platform for fifteen hours a day, usually clothed, perhaps hungry, walking to and from his work through the bitter weather, the suffering of this young man must have been intense. Through it all the comfort of his father and mother was uppermost in his mind, and for two months he never spent a single cent of his wages for himself. Car-drivers receive their pay every evening, and every night or later, will place him among the incurables, or bring him to an untimely end. Alcohol and all sleep-producing drugs are dangerous in the highest degree; for they mask the malady, without curing it. No organ in the human body is so abused as the brain, and no organ is so well fitted for daily use. Still, the brain is not so susceptible to disease as some suppose. The Appropriate Way of Indicating the Death in Any Trade or Calling.

Collections of quaint epitaphs very often find their way into print; but how appallingly rich our language is in aphorisms on death, of all styles—serious, sinagy and ghastly humorous. Indeed, every deceased person may be suited with an appropriate one, indicative of his profession, character and manner of death. Thus the public man bids farewell to the world; the merchant closes his early accounts; the little child is received among the angels; the lamp-lighter has had his lamp of life extinguished; the wearied go to rest; the night watchman's hour of relief strikes; the sailor runs into harbor; the ferryman pays his fare to Charon; the reaper bites the grass; the gossip goes to his silent tomb; the grave digger sinks into the pit; the tippler's last draught is drawn; the watchmaker runs down; the unhappy breathe out their last sighs; the wanderer has gone to his home; the conveyer's line-thread is cut by the fates; the bootblack goes to the shining land; the musician's wind has given out or his string has snapped; the dentist is filled in; the flutist pipes on his last note; the Jew rests in Abraham's lap; the sucker's pipe is put out; the stage-goer goes to the land that knows no waking; the commission merchant is consigned to the dust, the nobleman is gathered to his fathers; the cover of the inquisitive are closed by death; the scene-shifter "shoves clouds," the learned give up the ghost; the penman has run his last race; the washerwoman has wrung out her spirit; the atheist has had to believe it; the corner-man has been transferred to the great army; the servant goes to meet his master; the Indian brave goes to the happy hunting grounds; the hero has fought his last battle; the soldier has stacked his arms; the glutton must eat the grass; the lecturer go the way of all flesh; the ticket agent passes in his checks; the Postoffice employe goes to the dead-letter office; the bloated bondholder is called in; the banker is drawn on by death, and without recourse endorses it; the jig dancer shuffles off his mortal coil; the linguist is translated to a better land; the distiller goes to the land of spirits; the tragedian makes his exit from the stage of life; the body-snatcher awaits the resurrection; the gallant yields to the charms of death; the worm is the sexton; the gutter;" the florist goes where the woodbine twineth; the ice man stiffens up; the crockery man's vase is shattered; the clothier non-suited at last; the insurance man pays his last premium; the hod-carrier goes to the highest round; the printer's form is locked; the engineer's throttle is closed; the policeman is pulled to his narrow cell; the base ballist makes a home run; the Mormons go up to the Celestial Salt creek; the farmer is "planted;" the lynched border man "walks off a barrel, climbs a sapling, dances a jig, becomes cottonwood fruit, or is left kicking at the United States," and lastly the confidence operator.—Cincinnati Enquirer.

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

—Eight Methodist Churches in Detroit have resolved to pool their debts and raise a common fund to pay them.

—The Congregationalist says that a layman with a talent for analyzing book-accounts has discovered a deficiency of $50,000 in the finances of the Massachusetts Home Society. He calls on the Executive Committee to make an explanation.

—The thirty-seventh annual report of the New York Board of Education shows that the city has 276 schools and 3,275 teachers. The total cost of these for the fiscal year, ending last December has been $3,288,874.93. The number of pupils taught during the year was 264,170.

—A Presbyterian, writing to the Interior, concerning the inferior class of men received by theological seminaries in the West, says that "the rivalry among the theological seminaries (of his church) and the ambition to outshine one another in 'numbers' is so great that 'almost anything with two legs is welcomed as a student.'"

—The conversion of a European to Buddhism is a rare event. One such conversion is now reported from Siam. The convert is a young Swede native in Austria. This gentleman obtained from the King of Siam permission to pass his novitiate in the magnificent temple attached to the royal palace. The reception gave rise to a most imposing ceremony. He will have to spend four years completely isolated from the world.

—The Presbytery of New York certainly have done a timely thing in condemning the habit of buying and reading Sunday newspapers. The practice is by no means limited to Presbyterians, but is on the increase among them. And the objection to reading the Sunday papers is, not that they are printed on Sunday merely—which also holds good against the daily papers of Monday—but that for one day in the week at least, man ought to be content to put the busy world with its excitements away, and turn his thoughts in another direction. It is well every way not to read on Sunday the record of the world's news, so closely connected with business affairs, and serving to turn the mind in the channels of business, with the accompanying perplexities and worryings. And it is every extra moment of physical or mental labor that serves to impair vitality and kills more men than the severest toil does. Put that Sunday newspaper away, then, and let the tired brain find rest in turning to other and quieter themes.—Christian at Work.

—The San Francisco Board of Education has been overhauling the teachers of that city as to their educational qualifications, and finds that some of the young men who had been nominated for positions are decidedly unfitted for their work. The teachers were asked to write the following words, with their definitions: Vacillation, hieroglyphics, antediluvian, aphorism, hiccough, tactile, hallucination, bovine, vehicle, periphery. One of the young ladies spelled and defined them as follows: "Vossilation—the act of being vasell; kyeroglyphics [correct definition]; antediluvian—the art of loosening down before, as it were; alaphorism—a rising beforehand; bivouac (was unable to define); codicel—relating to a code, law or rule; hollusenation—a big fool; hiccough or soparea. [sic] were; invegle—somewhat strange, unnatural." Several others who were examined spelled and defined some of the words as follows: "Superanuated—the state of being over-exerted; bivious—excitement, galety, coloidic [couldn't define]; perrifery—[couldn't define]; hallucination—act of rejoicing or blessing; bivouac—American bush-fighting." One of the young ladies who received 72½ per cent. defined hallucination as "the condition of being made clear."

—French druggists run some risk in recommending remedies. One of them lately aided a few sous' worth of "white water," Goulard's lotion, for the treatment of a burn. The patient was seized with tetanus and died, and the druggist was prosecuted for illegally practicing medicine, and fined 625 francs.

AGRICULTURAL AND DOMESTIC.

—French Pancakes.—Take half a pint of milk, one egg, pinch of salt, small half teaspoonful soda, flour to make thin batter; bake in large cakes, spread with butter and currant jelly, and roll them up neatly to serve; sprinkle sugar over if you choose.

—House plants that look drooping and starved should have the surface soil removed from the pots and replaced with a top dressing from the compost heap, prepared by mixing it with sufficient sandy loam to make it light and porous, after which it should be sifted.

—There is no woman in America who can afford to grow up in ignorance of household management. The comfort of some home in the future is endangered whenever instruction is withheld which would enable a woman to plan wisely all arrangements necessary for the well-ordering of the spot which is to be her home, whether that home be one of wealth or of her purchase, and the reverse may come even after prospective wealth makes such knowledge seem unnecessary.—Christian Intelligencer.

—According to an experiment made with potatoes and corn last season, by Mr. S. B. Wood, of Cuyahoga county, and reported in the Ohio Farmer by William H. Yeomans, the butt-ends of potatoes, and the kernels of corn from the butt-ends of the ears, yielded a larger crop that were materially better than where the opposite course was pursued. In the case of the potatoes, the stalks from the butt-ends were much the larger and more forward at the first hoeing. The increase in the crop was some 20 per cent. in favor of the butt-end kernels. Of course, repeated experiments are necessary to settle a question of this character.

—Sprouting the white potato will advance the crop two weeks. They should be cut so that about two eyes are allowed to each piece, and these should be planted in hot-beds, with very thin covering of soil, or it is better to plant in boxes and set these in a hot-bed, so that after they are properly sprouted they can be at once carried to the place of planting. If the weather should be anyway cold, protect with a thin covering of straw when the plants make their appearance above ground. Some persons, who want a large quantity sprouted, cut the potatoes as described and sprout them on boards, boxes or crates, in a dark place, and when sprouted, say from an inch to an inch and a half, expose them to the air by moistening two or three times a week with tepid water. They should be planted out so that there is not more than two inches of soil over the top of the sprouts.—Germantown Telegraph.

—The affection of the scalp known as dandruff is exceedingly irritating, and it occurs in some cases where there is no good reason to suspect a blood impurity. Generally, however, it will be found that something of a scrofulous taint produces it. In all such cases there is but one remedy required, and that such medicine as will gradually change the character of the blood. In ordinary cases it is said by a writer, whose opinion is of value in the Cleaning World, a preparation of one ounce of the flour of sulphur, and one quart of water will prove efficacious if applied. The two are put together, repeatedly agitated at intervals of a few hours, and then the water is drained off. The sulphur not being soluble in water, the latter has neither color nor smell. The head can then be moistly saturated with it every morning without inconvenience. This writer says that in a few weeks every trace of dandruff will disappear, and that the hair will become soft and glossy.—Foote's Health Monthly.

The Beginning of the Dairy Season.

The dairy season proper opens this spring as much later than the average as last season did earlier. It will be remembered that last spring the snow went off unusually early, and that a good early start, thus beginning two or three weeks earlier a season of unprecedented productiveness, which extended two or three weeks further than usual into the fall—even up to the beginning of the last month—ensuring to last year the dairymen had too much of a good thing. They will have nothing of the kind to complain of this spring; and should the season prove unfavorable for production, and shorten up as much at the last end as it has in the beginning, it cannot fail to have a marked influence on prices. The question to be solved will then be as to whether the smaller yield will bring enough more per pound to make up for the decrease in the amount of the product.

It is not unlikely that the low prices last year, the overstocked market and the unpromising outlook for the future may induce some to go out of dairying and turn their attention to other branches of agriculture. If so, not every one that can afford to do a losing business, year after year; and we are sure that many dairymen actually lost money last year, if they did not the year before. Another losing year must prove disastrous to some of them.

One of the effects of the later opening of the season, while reducing the manufacture of cheese, will be to throw upon the market an increased amount of hay-made butter. This, while deficient in flavor, is too often dirty as well as so full of caseine as to be poor keeping, and soon becomes unfit for human food. We see no way of avoiding this flood of inferior hay-made butter. We can only suggest that especial pains should be taken by dairymen to make it as clean and nice as possible—care being had in securing cleanly milking; a proper, even temperature in setting, and churning before the cream gets too old—and that the butter be sent to market as early as possible, that it may reach the consumer in its best condition. There is an increasing demand for fresh-flavored goods, and it is hard to sell anything that is little off flavor. This is a fact which dairymen will do well to bear in mind in the future. They must either sell their butter as soon as it is made, or else put it up in brine, in air-tight packages, so that it will retain the fresh flavor that it has when it first comes from the churn.—American Dairyman.

Flower-Garden Hints.

Many people say that their flowers, which ones did well, do not thrive any more, and the reason is incomprehensible to them. In many cases the trouble is from worm-rot soil; and if a little manure or a little fresh earth be added occasionally it is wonderful what an effect it will have on the renewed growth of half-worming root-stocks. Some kinds of flowers, especially, soon grow surly and bad-tempered unless they have a complete change of earth once in a while. The verbena is of this character. In perfectly fresh soil—that is, earth which has never grown a verbena before—it grows like a weed; but the next year it is not quite so well, and in a few years it absolutely refuses to grow at all. Many people are even forced to confess that the verbena won't do for us as it used to years ago.

Other flowers are not quite so stubbornly faithless as the verbena, but still all more or less like to feel replenished by an addition of some kind occasionally to the earth-blessings they have already been treated to.

Almost all our best hardy flowers are natives of woods or low, undisturbed lands, where the decaying leaves from the trees or the washings of higher surface-lands make a new annual nourishment for them; and it has been found by experiment that nothing is so good for these pretty little flowers as well-decayed leaf-mould from the woods, spread round the root-stocks, just above the ground. But, where this cannot be had, any other well-decayed vegetable refuse that may "be laying around loose" will do very nearly as well. Strong, rich barn-yard manure that has not been found very good for garden-flowers. It makes the herbage too strong and the flowers less in proportion. But, if nothing more natural can be got at to help the flowers along, but the soil seems exhausted and poor, this will be found much better than leaving the plants to struggle along as best they can.—Germantown Telegraph.

An Asparagus Bed.

He who lives in the country and has no asparagus bed has at least one heavy sin of omission on his conscience for which he never can give an adequate excuse. The man who says he "provide for his own house is worse than an infidel," he thinks will not "bother" with an asparagus bed

TUESDAY, APR. 22, - - - 1879

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

Grant and Tilden the Leading Candidates.

THE New York Times of Thursday publishes reports from 170 of its correspondents, in every state of the Union, showing the condition of the public feeling in each relative to candidates for President in 1880. Its correspondents were some time ago instructed to carefully investigate the feeling in each party; and report the results. The returns thus gathered show that the Republicans of the Union are at present overwhelmingly in favor of the nomination of Gen. Grant, and believe that, if he is nominated, his election will surely follow. The Democrats are hardly anywhere in favor of Tilden, but almost everywhere they expect him to be the nominee, and will vote for his nomination. Out of 157 points heard from, Gen. Grant is the favorite in 130, Blaine in ten, and the rest divided. The Democrats in 98 of the 157 places prefer Tilden. Thurman has 23 districts, Bayard 11, and Hendricks and Hancock the rest. These reports, presented with unusual care and wholly devoid of sensationalism as they are, indicate that, if the Democratic convention were to be held to-day, Tilden would receive the solid votes of twenty-one of the thirty-eight states; and that, if the Republican nomination was made to day, Gen. Grant would receive the votes of all the states except four or possibly five; and Blaine would receive the votes of four.

Gen. Grant is the first and the enthusiastic choice of all the southern states. He is the strongest in all the northern states, according to these reports, except Maine, California, Nevada, and Oregon. If Grant is not nominated, however, Blaine is the second choice in most of the northern states. In the southern states no second choice is mentioned. The following quotations from the Times' summary show the preponderance of Republican sentiment in the northern states:

Maine—"A majority of the Republicans favor of the nomination of Blaine."

New Hampshire—"The Republican leaders and masses are almost unanimous for Grant."

Vermont—"Gen. Grant, beyond question, is the first choice of the Vermont Republicans."

Massachusetts—"Amid all uncertainty, the names of Grant and Tilden stand forth most conspicuously."

Rhode Island—"Grant is the first choice of the Republicans of the little state, and Blaine is the second."

Connecticut—"Grant is mentioned first."

New York—"In no state is the sentiment of the Republicans more clear, pronounced, and unmistakable for Grant."

New Jersey—"The weight of Republican opinion is in favor of Grant."

Pennsylvania—"Grant stands easily first.

Ohio—"Each party feels, after all that it has but one name to conjure with—Grant for the Republicans and Tilden for the Democrats."

Michigan—"The local liking for Senator Chandler has been greatly strengthened by his outspoken condemnation of the southern schemes, but among all classes there are found ardent supporters of Grant, and his hold upon the people of the state is growing."

Indiana—"Gen. Grant is undoubtedly the choice of the Republicans of every part of state."

Illinois—"Gen. Grant is uppermost in the minds of the Republicans of Illinois."

Iowa—"A strong feeling that the country needs a third term of Grant has been at work upon the minds of the Iowa Republicans. Blaine is very popular out there, but the drift of the party preference is for Grant."

Wisconsin—"The Republicans of the State put their trust in Grant."

Kansas—"It is clear that any full expression of opinion would be in favor of Grant."

Nebraska—"The Republicans are everywhere undoubtedly for Grant."

Minnesota—"Among the Republicans there is no room for doubt that if the choice were to be made at once Gen. Grant's name would be the only one mentioned."

Colorado—"Three-fourths of the Republicans are for Grant—the rest are for Blaine."

California—"Blaine's position on the anti-Chinese bill endeared him to the Californian heart, and his name is now the highest in favor with Republicans; but Gen. Grant is so nearly even with him that circumstances may turn the scale."

Oregon—"A large majority of the party would prefer Blaine."

Of course we are not in any way or degree responsible for the estimate of the Times, and cannot vouch for their correctness; though we presume them to be generally correct, inasmuch as they substantially agree with the information obtained from other sources. We think it therefore safe to conclude that Gen. Grant is at present the unmistakable first choice of the Republican party for President in 1880; and that Tilden is at present the most confident expectation of the Democratic party for President in 1880, though Tilden never was, and is not now, the choice of anybody. With the Republicans, at present, Blaine is the second choice of the majority: and Thurman the second choice of the Democrats. Who will be first and second choice next year time will tell. The first choice and successful man in each party next year may or may not be livin present first. Post and Tribune.

—Your candidate I cannot be—if I want to—B. Butler.

—Wonder if Congressman Hurd's Hurd from Cincinnati?

—When a man is in a peck of trouble he likes to have it come to pint as soon as possible.

—An exchange speaks of them as ex rebel soldiers. They are rebel ex soldiers, permit us to observe.

—Cato says the first virtue is to restrain the tongue. Well, now, that's so —while you're talking.

—We'll wager a suit of clothes that the time will come when no decent loyal northern man will sneeringly allude to the "bloody shirt."

—The pen is mightier than the sword; but a pair of good legs on a sawdust walking course will make more sawdust than the mightiest pen.

—A Republican that isn't a "stalwart" Republican to-day must have an awful weakness in his back; and several vacant rooms to rent in his upper story.

—More than half of the inhabitants of Italy, can neither read or write. What overwhelming Democratic majorities they must have in that country!

—Chapin says that impatience dries the blood sooner than age or sorrow. True, perhaps, but look at Tilden, surviving and by impatience and age and sorrow.

—The Republican Greenbacker begins to pull the cotton out of his ear. Just as soon as he gets it out there will be a fuss put in that ear. And it will be labeled "1880."

—Congressman Hurd is said to be a long-headed chap. Judging from his recent speech in Congress we'll bet his ears will come together on top, no matter how long his head is.

—Sending a milk and-water man to Congress now-a-days is too much like putting a piece of white chalk in the hammer of a flint-lock musket, or knocking down a mad bull with a wet rag.

—Next time I catch a rattlesnake in my door yard I'll jerk his fangs out and then let him rattle, if he wants to. Ought to have done it before—blast the old serpent.—Uncle Sam. Yes, that's so, uncle.

—It was a philosopher that said "the that buys what he does not want will soon want what he cannot buy." But this don't hit me, I did want it, or I shouldn't have offered what I did for it. —N. J. Tilden.

—If Mrs. Brooks wants to make a better scalp of Samson she can find plenty of suitable material. Mr. Samson was a very strong man, but Mrs. Brooks can do the subject justice, if she will set herself about it.

—A Mississippi paper says the "d— d Yanks have found out by this time that we were not put down to stay down." If you had received all of the "thanks" you deserved you would have been put up to stay up years ago.

—There are upwards of 10,000,000 cows in the United States. Allowing ten minutes for milking one of them it would take over 190 years for one hired man to milk all of them. But, then, when a man has a good stool to sit on and nothing else to do don't mind it.

—In 1880 every Union soldier will be called upon to do one of two things. He will either cast his ballot in the same direction that he sent his bullet or vote against the side on which he fought. It is well enough to begin to gaze these baldheaded facts right square in the face now.

On the 14th, while the Czar of Russia was taking his morning walk, an assassin fired at him five times with a revolver; but, fortunately, none of the shots took effect. The assassin was promptly arrested, and his trial will doubtless develop the motive of his crime. It is probable that it will prove to be inspired by politics—perhaps by the Nihilists. Within the last year or two, there have been a number of attempts to regicide by members of factions or parties allied to the German Socialists. The Nihilists of Russia have been guilty recently of a number of political assassinations and attempted assassinations of government officials; but the Czar has been so unversally and so well beloved by the people that his life was not considered particularly threatened. The Emperor of Germany however, is also greatly and deservedly loved by his people; yet twice have Socialist assassins attempted his life within a short time.

The Louisville Journal says "no Republican was ever known to desire a Northern State to be represented by a negro. That is one of the many peculiarties of Republican philanthropy." But, it is say Northern State the negroes were in a majority, as they are in some of the Southern, they would be likely to have a representation. That is a Northern peculiarity.—Boston Harbor.

Two darkies were vaunting their courage. "I isn't 'feared o' nothin, I isn't," said one. "Den, Sam, I reckon you isn't 'feared to loan me a dollar?" "No Julus, I isn't 'feared to loan you a dollah, but I does hate to part wid an ole fren' forebber."

Americans travelling abroad complain that the only news from the United States which finds its way into the columns of the press of foreign countries is of a criminal nature. And, as a consequence, foreigners, except the more intelligent class, have a very erroneous idea of the civilization of the new world. In European countries scandels and crimes are mentioned only in the court calendar, and then very briefly. In America the meanest tramp that is choked to death by a legal halter has a column telegraphed all over the country—just how often he kicked, and the words he uttered, and the crazy acts of the mob which gathered upon such occasions. There is good reason to believe that the publicity given to crime by American newspapers has done much to foster it.

One thousand Bonapartists dined in honor of the recent 23d birthday of the Prince Imperial, and the speeches expressed confidence of his ultimate reign in France.

The Republican revival is booming at such a rate that even the Cincinnati Gazette, right on the ground, cannot tell whether the Republican majority of Ohio is to be 50,000 or 100,000 next fall.

When the Confederates turned out the Senate officials who had served faithfully and efficiently for years to make room for raw Democrats, and ex-rebels at that, who never had any experience in the offices to which they were appointed, the people were made acquainted with the kind of civil-service reform the Democratic party believes in.

It is said that Paris contains but a fraction less than 2,000,000 inhabitants, and 200,000 less men than women. French wars have thinned the former out very considerably.

ACCORDING to a New York dispatch of the 7th, the New York World had instructed its reporter to prosecute the shyster who procured what purported to be a decree from a Wisconsin Court, divorcing him from a supposititious wife, under that provision of the law of New York, which makes the procuring of a legal paper of the character and in the manner described forgery in the third degree, and punishes the offender by sentence to the State Prison for from one to five years. It was also stated that Judge Wentworth has offered to go to New York at any time as a witness to establish the forgery.

MUNICIPAL elections were held in Ohio on the 7th. In Cincinnati, Jacob, the Republican candidate, was elected Mayor by about 500 majority. Columbus also elected a Republican Mayor by 1,700 majority. Sandusky elected a Democratic Mayor by over 600 majority, and Cleveland went Republican by about 1,500 majority. The entire National ticket, with the possible exception of Police Judge, was elected in Toledo, by about 400 to 500 majority.

The defendants testified against themselves—and their accomplices, and then claimed release from fines and penalties assessed for smoked practices, as well as immunity from criminal punishment; pleading that they were promised such immunity and release by the District Attorney. The Court sat down upon this plea, holding that the District Attorney had no authority to make such promise, thus reversing the decree in the Court below, which it was held that he had.

IN Albany, N. Y., on the 8th, the Democrats elected ten, the Democrats and Nationals twenty-one, and the Republicans four, Supervisors. John Guttman (Dem.) was re-elected Justice of the Justices' Court, by 3,000 majority.

THE Republican Senators met in caucus at Washington, on the afternoon of the 12th, and, after a full discussion, agreed to make every possible effort to defeat the passage of the Army Appropriation bill as it came from the House, for the reason mainly that the enactment of the sixth section would prevent the use of the posse comitatus on election days for the execution of civil processes of any and all descriptions issued by the authority of the United States. Foreign.

FURTHER advices were received from Cape Town, on the evening of the 8th, which announced another disaster suffered by the British forces in South Africa. A DEADLY sporadic fever prevails at Casa Blanca, Morocco, and is attacking natives and Europeans alike.

NEWS was received in London, on the 8th, of another disaster to British arms in South Africa. It appears that Col. Pearson, who for some time had been beleaguered at Eksowe, and had to choose between death by starvation and an attempt to cut his way through the surrounding Zulus, adopted the latter alternative and made a sortie. The result was that the entire party was captured, and that nearly all the participating troops were killed. The situation of Col. Pearson was considered extremely critical, and it was believed that King Cetewayo would attack and destroy his command, and then destroy the reinforcing regiments in detail.

THERE were numerous labor riots in the Durham colliery districts, on the 8th, and many of the iron works closed, the managers having left, because of fear of bodily hurt. An extra police force was sent to the different collieries to protect the non-strikers.

J. H. CARTER and M. VILLEMESANT, for many years director of the Paris Figaro, is dead.

A ST. PETERSBURG telegram of the 13th gives a general account of the recent slaughter of student prisoners at Kazan. It seems the prisoners had arranged to gain their liberty by forcing their way over the walls of the prison. A confederate betrayed the scheme to the authorities, who allowed them to enter the corridors, and then ordered the guard to fire upon both ends and nearly all killed.

ACCORDING to a Cairo (Egypt) telegram of the 13th, the Khedive had sent a special envoy to the Sultan of Turkey bearing a large sum of money to be presented to the latter. It was reported that the Sultan had promised the Khedive to restore the English and French Ministry under penalty of the deposition of his dynasty.

A FEW days ago, while Prince Milan of Servia was walking at Nisch, a shell exploded in the gun-factory, killing several of his Aide-de-Camps. It is thought an attempt was made to assassinate the Prince.

INNOCENT, Metropolitan Bishop of Moscow, and formerly Missionary Bishop of Alaska, died, on the 13th.

XLVI. Congress—Extra Session.

IN the Senate, on the 7th, the Army Appropriation bill was received from the House and referred to the Committee on Appropriations. A bill was introduced for the benefit of the Atlantic & Pacific Railroad grant, except so much thereof as shall be completed by the 4th of July next and for the restoration to the market of all lands along the line of the incomplete road, to be disposed of in the same manner as other public lands. A bill was also introduced for the relief of the Central Branch of the Union Pacific Railroad Company. Mr. Bell appointed Senator by the Governor of New Hampshire was further sworn in. A resolution was adopted authorizing the President of the Senate to appoint a committee of five to take into consideration all matters relating to the Freedman's Savings and Trust Company. The House was not in session.

THE Army Appropriation bill was reported, with amendment, in the Senate, on the 8th. Mr. Blaine gave notice of his intention of moving as a penal offense, punishable with a fine of any sum not exceeding $5,000 and imprisonment at hard labor for any term not exceeding five years, for any officer, soldier, or civil officer, or any other person except for the purposes named in the bill, to bring into or with a deadly weapon of any description within a mile of any polling place where a general or special election for Representatives to Congress is being held. Mr. Bayard's resolution calling upon the Secretary of the Treasury for a statement of the amount of Judge Advocate General's Department of Justice at New York, since 1870, was adopted. Mr. Bayard introduced a bill to repeal the act passed in 1862 providing that the Treasury, and to authorize the issuance in lieu thereof of fractional currency. The bill was referred. In the House, quite a debate was started upon the propriety of instructing the Chairman of the Committee of the Whole when the House should be in committee on the Legislative Appropriation bill to award the floor in accordance with the rules of the House, and not be bound by any list of speakers which might be formed. The appropriation bill was then formally referred to the Committee on Rules. The Legislative Appropriation bill was then taken up in Committee of the Whole, and several pages of unimportant amendments were adopted, of order.

A RESOLUTION was introduced in the Senate, on the 9th, calling on the Secretary of the Treasury for information as to sums paid Federal Supervisors of Elections and Deputy Marshals in the State of Florida, from 1870 to the present time, including amounts paid to District Attorneys, etc. A Bill was introduced to authorize the Consolidated Great Southern Railway Company to construct a railroad in the State of Georgia. The New Hampshire Senatorial case was further debated. In the House the Committee on Appropriations made a report, which, after being modified, was agreed to. As adopted, the new rules provide for the appointment of Select Committees on the Law inspecting the Civil Service, Regulation of the Presidential Election, the Prevention of Contagious Diseases, Labor, the Mississippi Levees, Expenditures in the Treasury Department, Expenditures in the Navy Department, Expenditures in the War Department, Expenditures in the Interior Department, Expenditures in the Post-Office Department, Expenditures in the Department of Justice, Expenditures in the State Department, Expenditures in the Department of Agriculture, Elections, Claims, Census and Appropriations to fill vacancies. The Committee on Commerce shall have the privilege to report bills making appropriations for the improvement of rivers and harbors. It is assigned to the Committee on Rivers and Harbors in regard to all bills, forbidding the reprinting of the bills in the Congress when introduced in another Congress; giving to the Committees on Banking and Currency, Coinage and Ways and Means power to report at any time, and authorizing the majority of a day for the consideration of any public bill reported by one of these committees. Providing that the morning hour shall not be dispensed with on any day, for any purpose except by a two-thirds vote of the House; requiring the swearing of the floor in the House and the Committee of the Whole; providing for the practice of making lists of those members desiring to speak in order; requiring the presiding officer to remember the wishes of members, and that in recognizing members he shall not be bound absolutely by his list, but shall alternate between the two sides.

THE New Hampshire Senatorial case was further considered in the Senate, on the 10th, and a resolution was finally passed—50 to 16—declaring that Mr. Bell was entitled to the seat by virtue of appointment by the Governor. The vote was as follows: Yeas—Allison, Anthony, Bayard, Beach, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron (Pa.), Cameron (Wis.), Chaffee, Conkling, Davis, Dawes, Ferry, Gordon, Groome, Hamlin, Hill (Col.), Hill (N. Y.), Howe, Kirkwood, Lamar, Logan, McDonald, McMillan, Morrill, Paddock, Platt, Plumb, Ransom, Saulsbury, Sharon, Sherman, Voorhees, Walker, White, Whyte, Williams—36. Nays—Butler, Call, Cockrell, Coke, Eaton, Gibson, Ingalls, Jones (Fla.), Kellogg, Kernan, Lamar, Maxey, Morgan, Pendleton, Rollins, Saunders, Vance, Vest, Wallace, Withers—20. Absent—Jones (Nev.), Matthews, Windom and Hoar, who would have voted in favor of Mr. Bell's admission, were paired with Messrs. Bruce, Kirkwood and Logan (W. Va.) and Saulsbury, who would have voted against admission, were paired with Messrs. Jones and Kernan. Mr. Bell was then sworn in. A resolution was adopted until the 14th inst. by the yeas, 27, nays, 24. The Legislative Appropriation bill was taken up by the House, in Committee of the Whole, and an amendment was agreed to repealing the sections providing for the biennial examination of pensioners, and directing the Secretary of the Treasury, in order to provide for the payment of arrears of pensions, to issue immediately, in payment of the ten millions of legal-tender currency now in the Treasury, kept as a special fund for the redemption of fractional currency, and providing that fractional currency may be redeemed by any clerk of money in the Treasury.

IN the Senate, on the 11th, Mr. Hereford made a speech against Mr. Hoar's resolution declaring the Democratic programme for the passage of appropriation bills to be unconstitutional and revolutionary. The Army Appropriation bill was taken up, and Mr. Withers explained its provisions. An amendment was adopted, the Committee on Appropriations having agreed to resist all amendments except those of the Senate proposing them accordingly, the reason assigned by Mr. Hill was for one of honor being that amendments would delay the passage of the bill. Adjourned. In the House, the Legislative Appropriation bill was further considered in Committee of the Whole, and amendments were agreed to striking out the clause providing for the purchase and distribution of seeds by the Agricultural Department from the $50,000 appropriated. The Standing Committees were announced.

THE Senate was not in session on the 12th. In the House, the consideration was resumed, in Committee of the Whole, of the Legislative Appropriation bill, the pending amendment being one to increase the $50,000 appropriation for contesting and for conducting contagious diseases among domestic animals. After a long debate, the matter was referred to the Committee on Agriculture, with instructions to report promptly. Other amendments were disposed of, when the committee rose, and a motion was made to adjourn to the 13th, it being understood that the object of the motion was to prevent the introduction of financial and other questions. Pending the motion the House refused, by yeas, 108—all the Republicans voting in the affirmative, and all the Greenbackers in the negative, as did all the Democrats except the following: Bisbee, Bland, Clymer, Cox, Forney, Forster, Kenzer, Hammond (Ga.), Hurd, Johnston, Lowe and Talbott. The Speaker was paired with a Republican; Mr. Kelley voted with the Greenbackers.

Mesalliances.

The recent marriage of a young lady in this city to a handsome young car-conductor, recalls an event of the same complexion which occurred in England some years ago. A young lady, while longing to "an ancient and honorable stock" in Cheshire, a hob-bed of old Tudor families, was in the habit of going into Chester to shop, and generally took the omnibus, to proceed from the railroad station to the heart of the city. In the course of these excursions she contrived to become interested in the "seat of the 'bus," as it would be expressed in England. One morning she was missing, and, on her return home, announced that she had been married in her hood ago. The most singular part of the business was that she did not remain with her husband five minutes after the marriage ceremony, and it must be presumed that she married him under the influence of ploque. The family determined to try to get the marriage set aside on the ground of fraud. She had married under the name of Bevan, and they contended that had she given her name as Lee-Bevan the clergyman would have recognized it, and refused to have performed the ceremony; in fact, their plea was that the suppression of Lee was a suppressio veri, tantamount to a fraud. The Courts, however, decided that the marriage held good. In another case, which occurred more recently, the daughter of the then Chief Registrar of the Court of Chancery eloped with the butler. Her father had received a letter warning him of the attachment, and at first rejected the imputation as absurd; but, on speaking to his daughter, she frankly admitted that it was true. Astounded, he dismissed the butler. A few days later his daughter disappeared. Within a year she died. Her favorite brother was with her in her last hours, and she told him that, while grieving deeply at bringing mortification on her family, she could not repent doing otherwise. Her husband had treated her with the tenderest kindness, and she was devoted to him. Early in the present century the Countess of Rothes, a peeress in her own right, married a gardener, and the present Countess is his granddaughter. It will thus be seen that mesalliances have oftentimes occurred in the case of persons of very high social position. Nor have they by any means invariably proved unhappy.—N. Y. Times.

California's Strong Man.

The death of Charles Bennett, formerly Superintendent of the San Francisco Olympic Club, appears destined to reopen the discussion concerning the effects of muscular training upon vitality. In order to reach any intelligent conclusions, however, it is necessary to state the case correctly in the beginning. The facts are briefly these: Several years ago Mr. Bennett found himself affected by symptoms of pulmonary disease. At that time he had never practiced gymnastics, and was a slender and weakly. Acting upon the advice of friends, he joined the Olympic Club, and went into something like a regular training. In a few months all the alarming symptoms had disappeared, and, under the new regime, he rapidly developed great muscular power. He became eventually a remarkable athlete and active gymnast. His strength was so great that he could put up a 250-pound dumb-bell with one hand, and 150 pounds with the other. He was an expert boxer, and a daring acrobat. On one occasion, when the Olympic Club gave an exhibition at the old Metropolitan Theater, a member named Ward, a very daring gymnast, and a well-known compositor, was performing what is known as the Olympic Leap, and fell from the trapeze, some twenty-five or thirty feet above the stage. Bennett was standing directly underneath, and as the falling man approached he clasped him in his arms, and by the exertion of his great strength saved his life. But the shock strained him severely. When Mace, the pugilist, came to California, Bennett put on the gloves with him, and the champion was astonished to find an antagonist who could knock him clear off his feet at every blow. We believe that Mr. Bennett practically relinquished gymnastics five or six years ago. Whether his death, of consumption, can be attributed to overexertion, is a question which certainly cannot be answered either way confidently until much more careful examination of all the circumstances has been had.—*Sacramento (Cal.) The Heart-Broken Merchant.

The shrewdness and business capacity that have made the Yankee first-rate traders, and promote to turn this country into the workshop of the world, received a striking and happy illustration the other day in the tents of the peddlers; the characters, a rising young merchant and a pretty woman. He had a customer in the latter, looking for him, so they became betrothed. After a time she found out that she didn't love him well enough to marry him, and the match was broken off. It was a severe blow, and he staggered under it; but he fought well for himself, protested that his life was ruined, asked if she could not learn to love him, and in all ways did the proper thing. She was inexorable, however, and he sadly and reluctantly took his leave. While his eyes were full of gathering tears he bade his fair-being farewells, then closed the door upon his hopes. A moment later he opened it, stepped back into the room, and with tears in his eyes, brokenly murmured, "I hope this will make no difference about your coming to the store, Miss ——; and that your mother will continue to trade with us. I shall be happy to give the usual discount. Our stock is large and varied; our aim to please." And the door shut finally, leaving him alone with his grief.—Portland Press.

THE SENTINEL.

WILLARD A. SMITH, Editor and Proprietor.

CHARLEVOIX, - - MICHIGAN.

SPRING IN FIELD AND WOOD.

I.

The earth awakes as from a dreamless sleep;
And softly pitches dainties garments on:
She hands around her graceful gifts, a store
Of tender green, with blue embroidered deep.

Over that budding sun-tipped hedgerow peep
Rich vivid emeralds as we've glanced in stone,
Or in the cumin of mighty Cæsars shone;
And violets star in yonder wayside heap.

The fretting beauty of the wood is full
Of cosier, varied softly in their hue:
The Bible Dusk, and birds begin to sing.

The air is pure—most sweetly clear and cool,
And Heaven seems opened through the distant blue;
The starling screams, and doves are light on wing.

II.

See, through yon field the plowman drives his team,
And the pert crow close follows at his heel;
And o'er the furrow, slowly-winding, steal
Thin waves of mist that wave into air.

The upland lea is dotted here and there
With sentinel sheep—all but, like to pearls, reveal
A glistening whiteness; and the cattle kneel
In full contentment with the spring's fresh fare.

The crested wren is busy in the hedge;
The blackbird runs, then, cutting, whistles clear;
And the sweet lark goes carolling up the sky.

A blinish tinge is on the fir-wood's edge,
That pleases, yet a little tries the eye;
The squirrel, now waked, peeps out unmoved by fear.

III.

The children from the neighboring village school
Come forth to play with many a merry peal,
And shorten thus the hour for mid-day meal;
And answer slowly to maternal rule.

They dance and group themselves in circle full;
Then join their hands, and lose, and sudden wheel;
Their movements such unconscious grace reveal;
Recalling dainty Watteau, fresh and cool.

The babe laid down upon the grass crows fain,
And, creeping on, would make to join their play;
The meadow rings and now young voices sing.

How clear the notes! they echo back again;
Of innocence and joy most true report—
These voices are the voices of the spring.

—Good Words.

HER BLUE-EYED BOY.

"My boy, my boy, my blue-eyed boy,
For thee I sigh, for thee I pray;
When others greet the rosy dawn,
Or smile in happy dreams and sleep,
Turn from those loving arms away,
By those who reckon not tear or prayer,
Ere thou could speak thy mother's name,
My tiny bud, my babelet fair.

"My boy, my boy, my blue-eyed boy,
Could I within thy height e'en guess,
Or have an hour to kiss thee in,
Or hold thee in my weary days,
But thou art far away from me;
Between us ocean's billows beat,
And I can but the picture kiss,
My fancy paints in thee.

As Miss Isabella Spooner finished reading these verses and proceeded to cut them out of their page in the most graceful, with a pair of scissors that in company with a bunch of keys hung from her generous girdle, a murmur of admiration and applause broke from her audience. This audience consisted of Mrs. Spooner, Isabella's mother, a tall, thin, pale woman with a great deal of forehead—that is, in regard to height—and very white, well-shaped hands, which looked as though they had been moulded out of lard; Mrs. Dusenberry, a lady who looked about five-and-forty, but who, according to her own calculations, grew young so fast that her friends confidently expected that in a few years she would be a girl again, with lips so thin that they came near being no lips at all, bumpy brow, small, black, uneven eyes, a nondescript nose, and a figure remarkable for its unobtrusiveness; Capt. Hottop, Miss Spooner's uncle, a hale, hearty, rather handsome man, who had spent most of his life in a sailing vessel; Mr. Wellington Cotoper, a young pork-merchant, called "Devilish" by those of his fellow-beings who had been to the Aquarium, "because it came so near being Octopus, you know" with which compliment his ruddy complexion, and no forehead to speak of; Miss Eugenia Ann Octoper, sister of the pork-merchant, a pretty, port young girl, who came down to breakfast in diamonds ear-rings, and talked a great deal about "style;" and two or three elderly men and three or four young men, who, being mere nobodies, can, of course, only expect mention by name.

It was a lovely day in the last week of July, and these people were gathered together on the broad veranda of the Spooner homestead (Mrs. Spooner took a few summer boarders in for company), and, truth to tell, they could not have been in a pleasanter place. The house, substantially built of gray stone and draped with beautiful wistarias that climbed to the very roof, faced the Delaware River, and the gleam of the water through the branches of the catalpa-trees that stood just outside the garden gate, laden with showy flowers, among which the bees were having rare riot, was a pleasant sight to see.

Miss Isabella Spooner, the real mistress of the homestead—her mother's extreme lassitude rendering her only the nominal one—was a comfortable, sentimental old maid, with an obtrusive figure (to which respect she formed a great contrast to her friend Mrs. Dusenberry), light, very light blue eyes, and a snub-nose. She wore her hair brushed back from her forehead—a forehead much like her mamma's—and falling in a curly crop in the back of her neck. In evening dress those curls were always tied with a bit of bright ribbon, which imparted to them quite a juvenile appearance and charm.

Miss Isabella doted on poetry, and looked upon all rhymers as "heaven-born." In fact, she had an intense respect for and adulation of all persons connected with literature, and was wont to say, "Could I have been gifted I would have ranked no other boun."

"How very sweet!" said Mrs. Dusenberry, in a soft, too soft voice, as Miss Spooner, after reading the verses quoted above, took her scissors in hand. "They remind me of some lines I introduced in my first letter to Prof. Ganz at the time I became so interested in the lambs of the birds of North America. He said afterward, by-the-bye, that the brightness of that letter absolutely dazzled him." Mrs. Dusenberry prided herself on her letter-writing, and, anxious that her talent should not be "hid under a bushel," wrote on the subject which she thought would be most interesting to him, with a hint as to the impression he had made on her susceptible heart, to every man with whom she came in contact, as soon as possible after forming his acquaintance.

"And when do you expect her, Isabella?" asked Mrs. Spooner, lifting her hands, of which she was very proud, from her lap, where they were more closely, and then listlessly dropping them again.

"This afternoon, toward evening," answered Miss Spooner, taking a letter from her pocket and referring to it. "She writes: 'I hope to arrive just as the sun is beginning to throw over beautiful river, and the evening star peeps forth as bright—as bright, alas! as the eyes of my future husband.'"

"How very sweet!" said Mrs. Dusenberry. "It reminds me of a note I received the other day from Dr. Drake, in answer to one I sent him inclosing a fee for a copy of his lecture on the 'Human Skeleton.'"

"Well, I should say she was right smart. Yes-s," said the young pork-merchant, in a nasal voice. "Them verses sounded very pretty. I don't read anything in the newspapers but the lard quotations and hog-market reports myself, but I know good poetry when I hear it. And you read first-rate, Miss Spooner, you do. Yes-s."

"It was nice," said his sister; "but no letter could ever be quite as much to me as one with pomes by the hour, but she don't print none. She don't need to, 'cause her pa's rich. She only does it for fun."

"Well, I'm blessed," here broke in Capt. Hottop, dropping his feet with a bang from the railing on which they had been elevated, "if I wouldn't like to know what this is all about. Who is she? And who're the blue-eyed boy?"

"Why, bless me! you've just come, and you don't know, do you, uncle?" said Miss Spooner, putting the "pome" away in her pocket-book, and leaning back in her chair the better to meet the eyes of her friend, on which the gawky youth at her side dropped the fan, and burst into a loud guffaw.

"Hush!" cried Miss Isabella. "Here she is."

And up the garden walk tripped a slight girlish-looking woman, dressed in a blue-gray silk, with a Gainsborough hat, from which floated a long black ostrich plume, coquettishly set on the back of her head. Her pale yellow hair hung in babyish curls about her snow-white brow, and she raised a pair of lovely yellow-brown eyes to the group on the veranda.

That Bridge Tax.

Smith, of the Charlevoix Sentinel, sends up his little yell of victory, and with the characteristic modesty for which he is noted, takes unto himself much credit for the result of the vote on the bridge question in Charlevoix county. He has assumed from the outset that the bridge bonds were legal, and must be paid, but dishonestly ignoring his duty as a county journalist, he has studiously avoided any reference to the methods used to fasten the payment of these illegal bonds upon the people. Every communication relative to the origin of this iniquitous scheme which might affect the vote thereon, has been suppressed, and if the result is at all attributable to Smith and the Sentinel, it has been accomplished only by the most persistent misrepresentation, and because parties familiar with the true inwardness of the scheme have been denied a hearing through the columns of of their county paper. With a view of bringing the matter before the people, notwithstanding Smith assumes the question as forever settled, we ask permission to occupy a small space in your paper in behalf of the almost unanimous vote against this project in the eastern part of this county.

First, The resolution as presented to the Board was for an appropriation of $1,500, and the vote stood SIX, to five against—not a two-thirds majority as required by law, and consequently illegal.

Second, The bonds were issued calling for $1,541.66, principal and interest.

Third, E. H. Green, the present Chairman of the Board, in every instance involving a money appropriation by the county, be it ever so small, has never hesitated to declare it lost unless sustained by a two thirds majority. This same Hon E. H. Green and other "virtuous dentizens of Charlevoix" issued and negotiated these bonds knowing them to be illegal, and have persistently labored to make the people believe that since they have been issued and sold, that we must pay them, using their clapsaddle, the Sentinel, as a mouth-piece.

The editor of said Sentinel has been a faithful servant, and closed his columns against those who desired that the people might know the facts in the matter of the bridge tax, and constantly held before the voters that it was boy's play, dishonorable, repudiation, &c., to vote against said tax, as the bonds were issued and must be paid, but forgot to tell them who might possibly pay them in the end. After the vote was taken under these circumstances, and a majority found to be in favor of paying said bonds, in his usual ungentlemanly and cowardly manner, he devotes a column of his invaluable paper to abusing us.

Smith, please look that column over, and in your next issue be a man for once in your life, and tell your readers just how many false statements you did make in that one column of editorial abuse. In regard to the ring, its existence and workings will be demonstrated in due time, for the end is not not yet. More anon.

W. C. NILES.
J. E. DARRAH.

Editor Sentinel please copy.—Record

The above joint-stock production is a marvel of effrontery and falsehood. In regard to the legality of the bridge bonds, our opinion from the first has run parallel with those of Messrs. Niles and Darrah. We believed, and so did they, that the action of the Board in issuing the bonds was legal. Orvis D. Wood, the Supervisor from Norwood, was as uncompromising an enemy of the bridge scheme as either Messrs. Niles or Darrah, and he, as Chairman of the Board, declared the vote on the bridge question carried, by a majority vote. Why did not Mr. Niles arise and appeal, or raise the point of a two-thirds vote being necessary? He did not but yielded to the decision. There was not a member of the Board that raised the point of illegality until after the bonds were issued!

The point raised that the amount authorized was $3,500 instead of $4,541.66 is weak. The Board authorized the issuing of bonds to the amount of $3,500 bearing interest. Does Mr. Niles suppose for a moment that bonds bearing no interest could be negotiated?

The bonds were issued by authority of the Board of Supervisors, without protest by any member thereof—(because of any alleged illegality,) and then we said they must be paid, and the people at the polls expressed the same sentiment.

These two persons, one puffed up by the mightiness of his egotism, and the other by the possession of a magnificent constituency of nineteen voters, say that we have denied them a hearing, and suppressed communications from that side. This statement is a good square, unalloyed LIE! Neither Mr. Niles, Mr. Darrah, nor any other person representing that side of the bridge question, have ever addressed a communication to the SENTINEL or its editor upon that subject, nor have they ever verbally asked for space in our columns.

We have not misrepresented the question. The proceedings of the Board of Supervisors were published from the records, and of their legality the people are as capable of judging as we. We only held that, the bonds having been issued and negotiated, it was "boys play" to submit it to a popular vote, and so it was.

These two petty Jacobins, buried up in the belief of their eminent superiority over the balance of God's creatures, have attempted to carry Charlevoix county by storm, and being thwarted at every turn, cry out in the intensity of their anger and chagrin. Remember gentlemen that the sun does not set within the narrow scope of your vision, and that outside of Springvale and Melrose humanity exists, and the world moves.

Instead of going to England to borrow money, the Canadians have recently been turning their attention to the United States. A 5 per cent. loan for the province of Quebec has been successfully negotiated in New York.

The Legislature has fixed the legal rate of interest in this State at six per cent, but leaves the rate on contracts unlimited, repeals the usury penalties, and re-enacts the section relating to interest computed upon over-due interests.

New Jersey responds to Ohio and Michigan. The municipal elections in that State, on the 9th, put the Republicans in possession of nearly all the leading towns, and gave them handsome gains over previous elections.

The Legislative correspondent of the Detroit Free Press, at Lansing, thinks that the progress in disposing of legislation is not such as to give any hope of a speedy adjournment. He says: "No one looks for the closing of the session much before the 1st of June."

The Death-Rate.

Our country is getting to be fearfully alarming, the average of life being lessened every year, without any reasonable cause, death resulting generally from the most insignificant origin. At this season of the year especially, a cold is such a common thing that in the hurry of every day life we are apt to overlook the dangers attending it and often find too late, that a Fever or Lung trouble has already set in. Thousands loose their lives in this way every winter, while had Boschee's German Syrup been taken, a cure would have resulted and a large bill a Doctor been avoided. For all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, Boschee's German Syrup has proven itself to be the greatest discovery of the kind in medicine. Every Druggist in this country will tell you of its wonderful effect. Over 950,000 bottles sold last year without a single failure known.

VOLUME XI.

THE tug Kittle Garlord made a trip to Beaver Island last week.

DIED.—A young son of Geo. Anderson of Harbaugh, died last Tuesday night.

THE steamer Gazelle is making regular trips on Pine Lake and South Arm.

DOCK DAMAGED.—About thirty feet of J. A. Conklin's dock, at Wayne, was carried out by the ice last week.

MONEY TO LOAN, on good real estate security. Inquire of A. R. Dwright Charlevoix Mich. 16 1yr

PARTIES at South Arm have purchased the small steamer Little Western, and propose to run her between there and Charlevoix, for 25 cents for the round trip.

D. C. NETTLETON, of this place, has a very convincing letter in the Petoskey Record, on the Charlevoix side of the bridge question. We shall publish it next week.

THE Charlevoix Sentinel is just beginning its eleventh volume and the Lake City Journal its third. Both are doing excellent work for their respective counties.—G. T. Herald.

THE schooner Emma and scow Gray Eagle arrived from Traverse City Sunday with cargoes of finishing lumber for the new buildings being erected. Work will now go rapidly forward.

W. A. Smith, editor and proprietor of the Charlevoix Sentinel, made us a pleasant call this week. He is in town a few days to obtain material to complete the new addition he is building to his office.—Eagle.

We received editorial calls this week from W. A. Smith, of the Charlevoix Sentinel and A. H. Johnson, of the Leelanau Tribune. Mr. Smith is here to procure the finishing lumber for his new office.—Herald.

LEG BROKEN.—Freddy, a young son of A. F. Myers, of this place, had his leg broken Sunday. Mr. and Mrs. Myers, with the child, were taking a buggy ride into the country, where the vehicle capsized with the above result.

AT THE MEETING of the Board of Health on the 23d inst. Dr. Levi Lewis was re-appointed Health Officer for the Township of Charlevoix.

A resolution was passed instructing the Health Officer to cause the removal of the slaughter house on the margin of the river, in case the same became offensive, in the judgment of the Health Officer.

The Detroit Evening News publishes a rather improbable story that Gen. W. W. Duffield, now State Senator, is likely to raise a body of 5,000 soldiers of the late war for service in Her Majesty's Army to fight the Czar of Russia.

THE Clara Belle is being repainted and fitted up in nice shape for her summer's work, and will begin regular trips on Monday next. Her route will be from Northport via west shore to Traverse City, returning by Bower's Harbor and west shore to Northport.

WE are pained to learn that our excellent old friend Mrs. Sarah Cunningham, of Marion, had a leg broken one day last week. She was in the field, and a team which was dragging a load of rails, suddenly turned and the rails were drawn over her limb. She is said to be in a critical condition.

ORDER IS.—The Postmaster General has issued the following order: "Owing to the rapid increase in mails and the establishment of many new post offices throughout the country, this department finds it necessary, in order to secure a speedy transmission of the heavy mails now passing, particularly over the trunk lines of railroads, to request the public that in all cases the name of the county, as well as the post-office and the State, be subscribed upon the letters, newspapers and other matter forwarded by mail."

Rev. T. S. Parmalee, Baptist, of Little Traverse, and Elder Wm. Carlton Irish of the church of Latter Day Saints, will hold a series of joint discussions at the school house, in the place, which will occupy several evenings, about the middle of May, due notice of which will be given when the arrangements are perfected. Mr. Irish will be remembered as the Mormon missionary who lectured here last winter. He is temporarily sojourning at the head of Pine Lake, Charlevoix county, where he has several adherents. He has labored in the missionary field for the last eight years. The discussions will be in regard to the divine origin of the Book of Mormon.—Petoskey Record.

A SPECIAL MEETING of the Charlevoix Township Board was held on April 23, 1879. Full Board present.

The Bonds of Druggists and liquor sellers were each fixed at two thousand dollars.

A Petition was presented to the Board signed by 57 tax payers of Charlevoix Township requesting the appointment of James S. Martin as Bridge tender. The petition was referred to the Commissioner of Highways with a recommendation that said James S. Martin be appointed on the terms specified in the petition.

Bills were passed and allowed as follows:

A. Bullars,	services as Register	$1.50
J. M. Clark,	" " Member of Bond,	3 00
W. A. Smith,	" " Clerk of Election,	2.25
E. R. Green,	" " Member of Board etc.	4.50
L. D. Bartholomew,	" " "	1.50
O. S. Washburn,	" " "	75

Adjourned.

C. E. SEE, Clerk.

A BANNE ITEM.—I notice in the Sentinel that, "If any of our (Charlevoix) denizens want a good square drunk they go forthwith to Petoskey, where the atmosphere and surroundings are more congenial to their "tastes" &c. Now see here? As the ice is nearly out of the lake, why should not these "denizens" turn their attention to the head of Pine Lake; the distance is shorter, and the getting rid of extra oralum can be done as cheaply, and on as short order, and with as much "double refined damnation," in the recipe as at Petoskey. It will help to build up the place, too, as the argument for its existence has it. Besides the soiled doves, as a matter of course and consequence, will soon be on hand; they follow the saloon business, you know, as naturally as a blacksmith shop and post office follows a grist mill. Yes sir, nice place. It will soon be so built up that the county seat business will come and sit right down amongst us. Can't help it. Wont the proprietor extend a branch of his saloon the coming summer to the "Baptist Resort" near Charlevoix. Wouldn't it be a great accommodation?

CURIOUS.

R. S. SHARPE will be on the road with his horse "Frenchman Wallace" this week.

CONGREGATIONAL.—The meeting for consultation held at the close of the service on Sunday evening last, resulted in the establishment of a Congregational service in this village. Rev. N. L. Otis of Montcalm Co., and a member of Grand River Conference of Congregational Churches, who has been spending a few weeks in our place was heartily invited to remain as pastor of the new Congregation. An executive and advisory committee was appointed, consisting of Hon. John Nichols, Hon. John S. Dixon, W. A. Smith, A. R. Dwright and E. F. Bisbee.

By invitation of Rev. Mr. Whitman, Mr. Otis will preach at the Methodist Church next Sabbath morning at the usual hour of service, when the Committee will be prepared to announce permanent arrangements.

The Charlevoix Sentinel has just closed its 10th year, and seems to be good for at least 10 more under its present management.—Petoskey Record.

GRAND HAVEN, April 19, 1879.

The new propeller built here by Duncan Robertson for Hannah, Lay & Co., of Traverse City, was successfuly launched at 3 o'clock this afternoon. This propeller is an addition to the fleet of Hannah, Lay & Co. and is to run between Traverse City and Petoskey. It is a very fine craft, 135 feet on deck, 26½ feet beam, and 10 feet deep, mean draught of water 7 feet 6 inches, with a displacement of 300 tons. The timbers are very solid, and great care has been taken with the work from the beginning.

The engine was made at the Ottawa Iron Works, Ferrysburg, is a condensing engine 30x30 having double expansion valves, with all modern improvements. The boiler was made by J. W. Johnston, Ferrysburg, 8 feet in diameter, 16 feet long, of the famous Stigo Iron, and calculated to stand any amount of pressure that may be put upon it. The cabin is made in Chicago, all ready to put in place while the iron Works are being completed. David Budd superintends the work all through for Hannah, Lay & Co.

WASHINGTON D. C., April 18.—The speech of Representative Burrows, of Michigan, to day, on the political amendments took the House by surprise. His collation of the incendiary portions of the speeches of the Democrats, to show by their own words that they were committed to revolution, struck them with consternation. His quotation from Blackburn's speech, that the gage of battle is thrown down, and his answer, that it is our our supreme pleasure to take it up, was greeted with rounds of applause from the Republican side and the galleries. His answer to the threat of the Democrats that they would starve the Government into submission was one of the most touching and effective pieces of oratory heard in the House for years, especially when he said that the loyal people who came forward with their lives in war will come again with their treasure in place, and pour it out to the Government; that the people will succor the Government till the end of the Congress, by which time they will have swept the Democratic party from the face of the earth. At this juncture the feeling was intense and the applause beyond control. The feeling on the Democratic side reached such a height, as the orator dealt his crushing blows, that Mr. Turner, of Kentucky, who had been shaking his long arm and brawny fist, shouted, "You're a d—d liar." Other expressions of abuse were uttered, which could hardly be distinguished in the confusion which prevailed on the Democratic side. After his speech Mr. Burrows was greeted in the most enthusiastic manner. He has secured the official notes of the debate, including the interjectory oaths and abuse of the Democrats as far as they could be heard, rather than to trust to the official publication, garbled to disguise the utterances of the infuriated Democrats on the other side of the chamber.

E. R. GREEN has erected another new house on his premises.

AN OLD MAN'S DIVE.

By the wide world's life we sat together,
Hand in hand in the golden days,
Of the beautiful early summer weather,
When leaves were rustling, and speech was joined.
When the birds sweet tune to the chorus of notes,
And the brook sang time to the songs that ran
Through its waves of flow'rs on grassy swards
And trees were waving Boleon.

By the river's side we walked together,
And sat on one log seatless,
And lighter time than a bird's feather
Is the fondly fleeting days as we spent.
Any boy's wild sketches of all things
Mazings of our endearing times
Are up the river, fishing, given
A world that seemed like a heritage oblaze.

In the autumn of life we roam'd together,
And the golden apples were ripe and red,
And the lingering lilac and honeysuckle bother
Summer's ripe fragrance when they shed.
And quite the trees the angels walked,
And again on us a sense of wings
Awe as serenely o'er us talked
Softly in their communings.

In the meadows of life we strayed together,
Watching the waving harvest grow,
And sweet the incense of the Father,
Our hearts in the lands skipped to and fro;
And the crops we reaping our new reptiles,
Reckoned us a special favor,
And the gain more dear to the donors' eyes,
And the hallowed vows glistened thanks.

Who was with us and what was round us,
Neither myself, nor my darling guessed.
Only we knew that somewhere about us
Girt from the mornings with crowns of rest;
Only we knew the unseeing fingers
Lingered fervidly where we stood,
Chained with our contentment links
Of something bigger than binding steel.

Oh, the riches one doth inherit!
Oh the magic which doth the mirage
Drive of bad the things of spirit
Into margins rare and strange,
My flesh is tender, and dry, and old,
My sighing breathed hair gray;
But our cries not poems good
Taught at the feet of days.

Harms of the world have come upon us,
Cups of sorrows we yet shall drain;
But we have secret which doth show us
Wonderful rainbows through the rain;
And we feed upon the bread of the years,
And by and resetting bring in the bliss,
But our life as hers not her babe
And I am happy in what God wills.

So we sit by our household fires together,
Dreaming the dreams of long ago;
Then it was being summer weather,
And now the rains are heard in snow;
Birdes hugs from the slippery eaves.
The wind blows, but it is growing late.
Well, well, we are entangled all our sources,
I and my darling—and we wait.

LOVE AND A LANTERN.

Barstow's Siding is a small station on the Texas & Western Railway, and located out on the prairie at the edge of a bit of scrubby woods. The little Village of Barstow is about a mile from the station, and to reach it one has to take a rough road through the woods. The line at this point is perfectly straight, and reaches to the horizon in both directions. These facts are essential to a right understanding of the events that took place at the station one night about a year ago.

Old Sam Britton, station-master, sat by the stove in the middle of the switch-house. By looking out of the telegraph apparatus near the window that looked out down the line, by the aid of a lantern she was reading a stray newspaper, the Iron Trade Review—a strange paper for a girl to read, but it belonged to a dear friend, and some singular pictures had interested her greatly. She was doing more. She read and listened. Not a thing stirred in the dull, bare room save the restless shoulder on her table. The incessant clatter of the machine fell on her ear, and yet she heard it not. Elm City was talking to Centerville, forty miles through the night, and every word was spelled on her sounder. Yet she heard it not, for her mind was alert to catch another sound. Her father had let fall the paper he was reading. He could not read, for a bitter disappointment kept his mind harassed and troubled. How long was this default of payment to the employes of the railway company to continue? The last month's wages had not been paid, and another month had nearly passed. The line needed repairing. There were two and one on this section and one of the signals was broken. The track-men had complained that very day that now and better tools were needed, and that more ballast was wanting.

Suddenly, far-away on the edge of the sea-like horizon, arose a star. The young girls eyes were on the paper, and yet she saw its rising. She looked out the curtainless window and watched the star grow bright. It did not seem to rise, but to grow big with brightness. It is not for love to sit and gaze. It must act. She rose, and in silence went to one of the great iron switch l'ers and stood with both hands clasped about the handle, her eyes down the line, where the star had become a flame.

Then came a far-away sound through the night. Without hesitation she pulled the lar forward. Far down the track the switch moved in the dark, and a great green eye turned out on the line, in the opposite direction, another green star suddenly turned to a warning red.

Samson Gilder sat on his high seat with one hand on the throttle-valve, gazing steadily ahead. A constellation of green and yellow stars had sprung up on his horizon. Jack Cinder, his fireman, on the other side of the engine, had given voice to the monster as it panted along the rails. And one star had flashed red. The engineer blushed and smiled in the dark and pulled the throttle-valve. Then came a push and jar as the heavy freight train rumbling behind pushed against the engine. And as motive power had ceased, and the immense momentum of the train drove the idle engine swiftly forward. The whistle spoke to the men behind, and they gladly pulled at the brakes, and the train entered the siding. The headlight threw a lurid glare on the switch-house, and by the light Samson saw a young girl standing by his track. She was dressed for rough weather, and wore a red hood that was not lovely. Samson thought it was beautiful in the dark, as if the great lamp and against the winter night. It may have been the peculiar effect of the light. It may have been love, for love has finer eyes than unloving mortals.

They came into the switch-house together, she smiling and happy, he pleased and gratified, yet with a shade of care upon his face. In his hand he held a new track-layer's bar, as useful as may be used to draw spikes from ties.

He spoke to Sam Britton pleasantly about the weather, and then said, "There's a bar for the section-master. I bought it myself. The company seems to be too poor to give its men proper tools—"

"To say nothing of our wages," added the old man, roughly.

"Oh, father, why do you harp on that? The company has a great deal of property. It will surely pay us our dues."

The engineer placed the bar against the wall by the door, and then turned to Mary. She had risen now to her little desk by the window, and there they sat down together. Presently Jack Cinder and one or two of the train men came and sat down by the dull red stove. The conversation among the men for the first few moments had a local tone, and needs no mention. Then it branched to a more important theme—the overdue wages. Even the lovers discussed the matter, and after a few words they stopped abruptly. Tears brimmed the girl's eyes, and she turned away and gazed out the window at the glowing headlight.

Then one of the brakemen said: "And I—" President is raising round the country in a drawing-room car. He's coming up the road to-night on a special, and everything has to give way to his train."

"I wish he might get tumbled into the ditch," said a deep voice that startled them all.

"Oh, Samson, how could you say that?"

"Because I'm mad. Here we can't—" Hestopped, and the girl blushed scarlet. "The President can make excursions over the line, and disarrange all the time tables, and yet we are two months waiting for our pay. I think——"

He stopped and looked toward the door; a human creature, half man, half beast, stood unbidden before them all. A tramp, foot-sore, homeless and hungry, he had found the door unlatched, and he wandered in looking for shelter. The station-master permitted the man to come in and stand behind the stove to warm himself, and he was nigh perishing with the cold, and then the conversation lapsed into whispers.

Suddenly there came the sound of a distant whistle. The station-master looked at the switch bars to see that the line was clear, and Samson Gilder rose and said: "That's William's train. I'll go out and wave him a friendly light as he passes."

The sound of the approaching freight-train came nearer, and the engineer took the lantern from the desk and went out. The others fell into silence as the rumbling train crept past the door. The young girl stared at the great headlight as it sprouted silvery, thinking, wishing and hoping.

Taking advantage of the noise, the tramp shuffled away toward the door. Just as he reached it he looked hastily around the room, and then slyly picked up the track-layer's bar and disappeared. His presence had been a burden, he had happily taken himself off, and they paid no heed to his departure. A moment after the door opened, and Samson Gilder entered. "The special is in sight, boys. We must be off."

The men reluctantly went out to their train, and the lovers met to part at the door. Her eyes were bright with disappressed tears.

"I'll seem so long to wait—and all for a little money."

"I know it, dear; yet, when the company do pay up, we shall have all the more."

Nearer and nearer came the great yellow star that had sprung up on the horizon. From far came the long, wailing sound of the express whistle. The lovers heard it, and held each a tighter clasp. The tracks before the door began to "sing." The monster came on in frightful fury. Sparks shot up in fountains from its stack. The ground quivered, the windows shook with its trend.

Ah! a despairing scream from the whistle.

An earthquake.

Some one rushed past the girl. She clasped the door for support, not knowing what had happened. She looked out into the night, stunned and terrified.

There was nothing—nothing, save a vast cloud of dust, white and ghostly in the night. Ah! a gleam, a flare of light. It shone through the curtain of dust as it drifted away before the wind. There were hurrying footsteps, shouts, cries for help, and groans. The dust disappeared, and the end of a overturned carload out in the right. The flames shot up higher. The wreck grew in horrid proportions. Ah! it was on fire.

It is a peculiar feature of American life that new and unexpected circumstances are always met and controlled by a spirit of organization that creates out of the men and materials at hand the mastery of events. In half an hour after the first crash, as the train left the metals, the frightened passengers were comfortably housed in the empty cars of the freight-train. A car-load of lumber had been despatched to make seats for the whole and beds for the injured. The freight-engine on the siding was used to drag the wreck away from the up line, and its tank-water and steam had been used to put out the fire. In an hour the freight-engine, in charge of the express people, started away with its dreary load, the well in the forward cars, the injured, on beds of hay robbed from the freight, in the next cars, the dead behind.

Darkness and silence fell on the lonely section, and save where the black wreck lifted its mangled bones against the sky, there was nothing to mark the disaster except the pale faces of the men who gathered round the stove in the switch-house. For a long time nothing was said. There are times when speaking seems impertinent. Events become too big for words. Then one of the men spoke, and said:

"They did say it were the President who were killed in the forward sleeper."

Mary Britton glanced at Samson Gilder. He was silent and self-absorbed, and his face gave no indication that he heeded this remark. At that moment the door opened and Jack Cinder came in, bringing in his hand a new track-layer's bar. He brought it to the light and held it before them all.

"Do you see that, boys? I found it under the smashed sleeper. It's a new bar, and—" The men looked at the bar for a moment in apparent indifference, and said nothing. The keener feminine mind sprang to intuitive conclusions. Her thoughts leaped from terror to a defense.

"It was the tramp. He stole the bar and wrecked the train."

"Mebbe he did, and mebbe he didn't. This I do know; Samson Gilder was a-wishing the President into the ditch. This is his bar, and he was out on the line just before it happened."

The Coroner's jury called to consider the case, Samson Gilder himself and others, killed at Barstow's Siding on the night of the 25th of February, and at the switch-house and heard the evidence of the persons who were known to have been present at the time of the disaster. Even the tramp had been captured. He was seen prowling in the woods near the line, and had been caught by the section-master and his men. Every one at once said, "The tramp did it." But the tramp had in his hand another bar just like the bar found under the train. He admitted having found the bar by the railroad company. He had seen the dis-ter from the woods, and had then crept up very low to be caught. After some time he had come back to find the bar he had dropped in the darkness in his flight. He had the bar with him when caught. He could prove nothing else in his defense, the bar was rusty from lying in the snow.

The reporters of the Centerville papers, who were present, called Mary Britton to the telegraph that a message was being dispatched. One of them placed a paper before her. "A tramp has been found who admits having stolen the bar, but it is plain that he did not use it. All the evidence goes to show that the engineer wrecked the train out of spite against the President."

These words Mary Britton sent off by wire to the whole United States, while her lover was arrested and held in shadow of advancing calamity. The operators who read off these words in their homes heard every word distinctly, little knowing the tragedy under which they were dispatched. Never in after-life did she forget that message.

"Gentlemen," said the Coroner, "this case seems to warrant me in referring the whole matter to the Grand Jury for further examination."

Weeks passed, and then the trial came on at the Court-House at Centerville. Samson Gilder had been committed to answer a charge of willfully wrecking a railroad train.

Mary Britton lived years in these few weeks. She could not believe Samson had committed so great a wrong. Yet everything was against him. Track-layers' bars were abundant enough. He could easily have found one about the place, and with it have drawn the spikes from a rail. Her mind went backward and forward over all this a hundred times in search of something to prove him innocent. She still attended to her duties at the station, daily sending and receiving messages. One morning, as she sat think-ing, the history of the sorrow that had invaded her life, her eyes fell on an old newspaper fallen under her desk. She picked it up and opened it. The Iron Trade Review. She eagerly turned to the second page. Ah! why had she forgotten these pictures? Strange black figures, etchings of iron. Patents printed. Given this slight clew, her mind leaped to a brave resolve. She would bring silence to love's rescue. How, she could not tell. She had a vague idea of what might be done, and, asking her father to attend to the telegraph, she ran hastily out on the line and down the road toward the village. Stopping at a certain house, she found a young girl who was a good operator, and at once hired her to take her place at the station.

Before night she had taken every dollar she had in the world from the savings bank, and was on her way to the city. The moving cars seemed to drag too slowly. Why had she lingered so long idle, and Samson in danger?

The day of the trial came on. At the trial all the testimony that we already know, and much more of less importance, had been offered by the prosecution. The defense set up the previous good character of the prisoner, and that seemed about all that could be said.

Mary Britton had given her testimony early in the trial, and it had seemed the all that she could do. She had more to say, but was not yet ready to speak. All the morning she had sat in the crowded court-room, watching the the well in the forward cars, the injured, on beds of hay robbed from the freight, in the next cars, the dead behind.

At the last moment she spoke to the Coroner, and asked for a slight delay. There might be yet other witnesses. The session began to talk against time, and a messenger was sent to hasten the lagging aid.

The knight arrived. A pale, thin-faced young man in glasses appeared, and demanded to give his testimony. Behind him came a marvelous array—men with strange tools, lanterns of singular construction, bars and tools of iron, and a number of gentlemen who seemed to be prosperous merchants and manufacturers. There came also an old German Jew and a farmer from Barstow. The young man spoke to Mary Britton with the utmost deference, and she consulted with him for a moment, and then presented him to Samson's counsel.

There was a slight murmur of surprise at this demonstration, and then Samuel Mayer was duly sworn. He testified that he was an expert in metals. He had examined the bar found under the wrecked car, and was prepared to prove by experiments he could use

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH.
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, APR. 29, - - - 1879

THE PRESIDENT IN 1880.

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, April 21, 1879

EDITOR SENTINEL.

There are always plenty of men standing on the brink of possible financial success, ready to tumble in when ever the opportunity occurs. When sporting men made the important discovery that New York was able and willing to pay $50,000 for the blessed privilege of gazing at four hobblers around a sawdust track, these enterprising gentlemen laid their heads together, and with the remnants of a long eared sidewalk edu cation, went into a committee of calculation and figured to the effect that, as for was to 50,000 so was an unlimited number of hobblers to an unlimited number of dollars. One sportsman made out the notice for the printer, while the rest rubbed their hands in anticipatory glee, and the world waked last Monday morning to find forty men upon the track at Gilmore's Garden, all breathlessly going for now here. By Thursday, fifty per cent of the legs had given out, and as we write a majority of the noble crazy has gone home to look up the shortest road to bed. Again, via plasters and liniment, with the notice over the door to the effect that no sawdust need apply.

It looks as though one or two of the walkers will come out with a pretty fair record. They seem to have the ability to supply their legs with plank as fast at the strength oozes out. But the poor fellows who have fallen by the way with paltry records of miles must feel that, in the long run, a pick axe is better than a long walk.

Men who know nothing about the wear and tare of a six day's walk, imagine that they set themselves an easy task when they enter for such a contest; but those who expect to shirk work by so doing will find themselves a good deal worse off than the Irishman who wrote to a friend in the old country that America was a fine easy place for a man, for all he had to do was to take brick up to the top of a five story building all day, while the man on top did all the work.

But I must confess that we are somewhat in excitement over a sporting in cidentin England. While rowell is receiving the congratulations of the crowned heads for walking America out of her knee, a plucky little American horse, "Parole," is beating John Bull at his own special game. My memory isn't especially charged with turf matters, but I believe the victory won Wednesday by "Parole" was the first instance on record of an American bred horse defeating an Englishman on his native health.

A bill has just passed the Senate, in which the great grand children of the present generation may feel an interest. The statute gives permission to cut a tunnel under the Hudson river between the point at which the principal railroads terminate at Jersey City, and a suitable place on the opposite New York shore.

New Jersey feels that something must be done to offset the elevated railroad attractions in favor of upper New York, and the one great thing is to abolish the ferry between shore and shore. The project seems to have started more in the freight than the passenger interest, but if men find that they can take seats in the cars at New York without the tedious transfer made necessary by the ferry, they will not wink long over the danger of a sub river passage.

Barnum has come up smiling and happy again.

I forget the count of the years through which that broad smile has beamed. Lions have decimated the human frame of too confiding trainers and are no more; tigers are lying in unforgotten graves, giraffes have perished through many feet of sore throat, and confiding ostriches have succumbed to too many parasol handles and spectacles, but Barnum still moves on. He did it last Saturday, and the small boy of domestic and imported parentage beheld and worshipped. There were the carts and chariots blazing in the brightest paint emphasized by the shiniest of varnish; there the animals in all the glory of holiday ferocioustess, while the far away backs of the elephants and the low down backs of the ponies were occupied by the Mons. and the Mme. (to say nothing of the Mlle.), who come so near breaking their necks that twenty five cents admission is nothing to a boy who thinks of the delightful possibility of their doing so. In the excitement of writing about it I forgot to mention the steam musical instrument with a very long name, which occupied one of the wagons. It's a desperately unkind thing for me to do to mention one feature of this steam blower (shades of Orpheus forgive me for calling it that!) as this letter may come under the eye of some one unable to leave all and start at once for this city, but duty to my correspondents compels me to give publicity to the fact that this new feature of the procession is capable of turning out a noise equal to that made by one hundred brass bands! Not one need question these figures, for I have them straight from Barnum's own posters.

A season or two ago, Messrs. Jarrett and Palmer thought that it would be an excellent idea to run their boat "Plymouth Rock" direct to the beach at Long Branch. There being no pier in the surf, excursionists have often been obliged to make the latter end of the journey by rail. The proprietors of "Plymouth Rock" made preparations to build a wharf at the principal spot, speaking from a hotel point of view, and had the structure pretty well under way, when a big wave or two quietly rolled in and took the whole thing with them when they went back to sea. This year the attempt has been renewed by a company of capitalists, but it seems they need more than a Sanscrit bottom to make a success of the scheme, as the iron shafts already sunk will not stop sinking, and China is hereby cautioned to stand from under. Engineers have been invited to propose remedies, and I believe things are looking brighter. A flat plate is to be attached to the lower end of each of the iron piles, and after driving down these supports till they cannot well be driven farther, it is thought that the surface presented by the plates will prevent the sinking of the shafts, even after the necessary weight of the upper structure is added. The success of this scheme will guarantee increased prosperity to one of our most delightful and fit reading Summer resorts.

Pasture still rages. One of our principal morning papers devoted over a column to the subject one day this week, going into the secrets of the extraordinary success of the opera. At the Broadway Theatre it is sailing on a prosperous voyage, manned by the famous "church choir" charms, and of Barred by revolists whose success must keep the "purser" loaded down with the substantial evidences of a prosperous voyage. The stage of the Fifth Avenue Theatre is also occupied by the same good ship, although next week Suppe's great comic opera "Patintza" will take its place.

RADIX.

WILLARD R SMITH, a young religious enthusiast at Hartford, started out to fast 40 days and 40 nights recently, but after going without food and water for about a week, he was sent to the insane asylum, and is now recovering.

A Hardin county, Iowa, man and his wife got to that point where they agreed to disagree, and each go their own way. The assets of the partnership were partitioned and set off to each, until only the baby was left, when the father said, "If you will leave the baby with me I will give you a good cow." The mother considered a moment and decided that a good cow was worth $25, and a baby—well, pretty poor property. She took the cow.

A Par Story.

From the Lowell Journal.

The Detroit Free Press struggles hard to show that the result of the state election this spring is encouraging to the Democrats for 1880. The Free Press editor must have been the boy that went into partnership with another boy once in the marble business. One of the boys had 1 marble and the other had 0, so the Free Press boy (if he was the boy) said they would put their entire stock together and then they would have 10 marbles. The other boy didn't exactly see how that could be, but the F. P. boy kept pounding away at him until he got the other boy to admit that it did look that way on paper, but he'd be darned if they could produce the marbles.

Henry Phillips, of the township of Colfax, Wexford county, and formerly of Ohio, was, on the 17th, convicted of infringing upon the game laws of this state through the act of shooting deer, and sentenced to 30 days in the county jail. This prosecution was made by the Forester Club of this place, which was formed principally for the purpose of protecting the game and fish laws.

CHARLEVOIX, April 10, 1879

One week ago yesterday I left my home in Crystal to visit this locality in the interest of the American Home Missionary Society. The first night from home was spent in Greenville with Mr. H. Densmore, the indefatigable Sunday school missionary. Thursday morning, April 3d, at 7½ o'clock, I took the train for Howard City, where we waited about half an hour for the train going to Petoskey. We encountered a blinding snow storm all day so that it was impossible to see the country along the route at any advantage. At Cadillac (formerly Clam Lake) we stopped about two hours for through train. Cadillac, though only five years old, is an incorporated city. The through train was well supplied with passengers until we arrived at Walton, Grand Traverse county, when about half of them took the branch road for Traverse City. At Kalkaska, county-seat of Kalkaska county, our train became snow bound, and all hands had to get out and shovel snow for about an hour. Arriving at Petoskey at about 10 o'clock in the evening your correspondent found comfortable quarters at the Cushman House. We had not time to visit the Methodist State Camp Ground, or any other places of interest in the region of Petoskey, but expect to as soon as navigation opens. The next morning we took stage for this place, 18 miles distant from Petoskey. We found good sleighing all the way except in a few places where the snow had been blown off. Since our arrival at Charlevoix, however, it has thawed so rapidly that the sleighing is now spoiled.

We find Charlevoix a place of about six hundred inhabitants. It is beautifully situated on both sides of the Charlevoix river, which is the outlet of Pine Lake, a charming inland lake about 15 miles long. From the foot of the lake to Lake Michigan it is only about a quarter of a mile, so that the famous Charlevoix River is only one fourth of a mile long. The government is dredging the river and building piers at an expense of $150,000, so that by fall it is expected that the largest sized propellers will come up the river into Round Lake, thus which a finer harbor cannot be found on Lake Michigan. Charlevoix is the county-seat of Charlevoix county, and is the place selected by the Baptists of Michigan as a summer resort. The citizens of the place bought the grounds at at an expense of $500 and presented them to the association. It is now designed to be exclusively a Baptist summer resort, but it is for all persons of good moral character of whatever name or order,—of course that would include all republican editors. Lots are sold at the moderate sum of $10 each and the money is used to improve and beauty the grounds. Last season a number of fine cottages were built and this season twenty or thirty more are to be erected. The water in Lake Michigan opposite Charlevoix is very deep and consequently the lake breezes are always cool. When the wind is in the opposite direction it comes off from Pine Lake and is never uncomfortably warm. Being between two lakes the air is always in motion. As a health resort this place is unexcelled. Such a thing as ague is not known. There has not been a death within four miles of here for about two years. This is the fan ous trout region of Michigan. The numerous brooks are literally alive with speckled trout, and the lakes and rivers abound with fish of all kinds. Beaver Island, the rendezvous of the Mormons, at an early day, is plainly in sight and there are said to be a few Mormon families in this locality. Yesterday we had an interview with a Mormon divine. He wears his hair as long as a woman's and is very zealous in the advocacy of the Mormon faith. He told us it was not a matter of conjecture with him, but that he knew the Mormons were right, and everybody else wrong. He claims to be a single man and wants to marry, and therefore proposes marriage to ladies on the first introduction, so we learn. More anon.

A RAW AMONG THE WOMEN.—Lovely woman at Washington is having a very unlovely contest all to herself. The custom has been to admit the wives of members of the House to the reserved galleries of the Senate upon a member's card, but the Senate ladies began to object to the crowd, finding that it didn't allow their new spring toilettes to show off to the proper advantage. They finally got things fixed to suit them, an order having been issued on the Senate side not to recognize the cards of members of the House. Probably such confusing as this could never have happened in any but a Confederate Congress.—Chicago Tribune.

Solid Southern Sentiment.

The following choice morsels of Confederate Democratic sentiment are from the Oktibbeha, Mississippi, Southern Statist, of Wednesday April, 16:

Let the speeches of Phillips, and Summer, and Linkburn, and all that stamp and brand of traitors be expurgated from the school books of the country, and let the political words of Calhoun again form a part of the curriculum of our colleges.

The men who unleashed the hounds of war upon our people in the name of "Union" were traitors, and they must be branded as traitors before the world, and damned to the depths with the Benedict Arnolds who opposed secession and accessionists in the days of the revolution.

We have captured the capitol, and he continues, p'l the rest.

Finally the state governments by putting the militia in proper trim, "Grant ab.d 'em" is a political war cry that means more than it seems.

Down with the devil born amendments!

Down with centralism and its hints of crown and sceptre!

Down with the pictures of Lincoln and the scoundrels who surrounded him in the battle days of '61-'65.

Down with every anti Democratic idea and life!

These be the watch words for '80.

The Indianapolis Journal

is of the opinion that there are ten GRANT men in the country to-day to one that could be found a year ago, which is probably putting it a little stronger than the case warrants; but that the GRANT movement is more popular than it was twelve months ago, there is no denying. And the reason is quite obvious to every observing person who can properly discern the signs of the times. It is mainly because of the reactionary and revolutionary conduct of the Democratic majority in Congress, which has made the country realize, and longer at the threat going aspirit of national affairs at a time when it needs rest, and cash hence. The people of this country want liberty and order both together; but, if they cannot have the full measure of each library, they will insist on having order, or as the old soldier said, "they will have peace if they have to fight for it." Consequently there is great confidence felt in the will and ability of the man who once met and vanquished the Solid South, and, if there are signs of a troublesome future—and the clouds are already bigger than a man's hand in the political horizon—the people may instinctively turn to Gen. GRANT. The action of the Akron Confederate Brigadiers in Congress, aided and abetted by their cowardly doughface associates in the North, is helping to make the GRANT movement "boom" more than anything else, or all things else combined.—Chicago Tribune.

The Death-Rate[illegible].

Our country is getting to be fearfully alarming, the average of little being lessened every year, without any reasonable cause, death resulting generally from the most insignificant origin. At this season of the year especially, a cold is such a common thing that in the hurry of every day life we are apt to overlook the dangers attending it and often find too late, that a Fever or Lung trouble has already set in. Thousands lose their lives in this way every winter, while had Boschee's German Syrup been taken, a cure would have resulted and a large bill a Doctor been avoided. For all diseases of the Throat and Lungs, Boschee's German Syrup has proven itself to be the greatest discovery of its kind in medicine. Every Druggist in this country will tell you of its wonderful effect. Over 950,000 bottles sold last year without a single failure known.

THE BEERS ESTATE SALE.—Saturday afternoon was the time fixed for the Administrator's sale of the Beers estate, which for seven years has lain dormant, and the court house was filled with those desirous of purchasing. Mr. Stockman, the administrator, conducted the sale in a wise and masterly manner, and it is generally conceded that the heirs have reason to be satisfied with the result.

The property located near the bridge in this village, was disposed of as follows: A lot adjoining O. S. Washburn, fronting 66 feet on Maple street, and running to the river, was sold to Amos Fox, for $145. Another lot adjoining the above, the same size, and bounded on the east by an alley running to the river, was knocked down to Carpenter & Bartholomew for $250. This purchase takes the entire Beers house. The remaining part of the acre was divided into seven lots, commencing with the corner and running to the river, and measure each 33x71 feet. They were sold as follows: No. 1, (corner) Byron See, $162; No 2, A. J. McLeod, $90; No. 3, A. E. Mason, $102; No. 4, Henry Cooper, $81; Nos. 6 and 7, Dr. Lewis, $103.

The record is a gratifying one for Charlevoix, that this acre of ground, which twelve years ago was bought by Mr. Beers for $100, has now brought at forced sale the sum of $1,032. It is a substantial and lasting evidence of the stability and importance of our village.

Lot 3 and the north east quarter of the south east quarter of section 28, was sold to Orlando Bliss for $146.00. The north west quarter of the south east quarter of the same section, fell to A. R. Upright, for $45. The above described land is well known as the contested tract. On Friday a Bill in Chancery was filed with the County Clerk by E. H. Green, Attorney for Fox & Rose, based upon a claim of a two-thirds interest in these descriptions.

Carpenter & Bartholomew have received a new stock of furniture, mattresses and spring beds.

THE HARBOR.

The Work on Charlevoix Harbor to be Commenced About July 1st.

A shade of sadness passed over Charlevoix last week, when the daily papers contained Washington dispatches to the effect that the Executive had decided, in view of the low condition of the Treasury, to withhold the harbor appropriations from expenditure for the present.

But, as our readers are aware, a petition had gone forward from Charlevoix, setting forth the bad condition of the harbor here, and asking for the expenditure of at least the amount left over from last years appropriation. Soon after its receipt at Washington, advices were received from Representative Hubbell, stating that he had succeeded in securing the release of our last appropriation.

Nearly simultaneous with this, Col. Mansfield advised Mr. Nettleton to the same effect, and notified him that he should proceed at once to advertise for the construction of three cribs, and the dredging of 30,000 cubic yards in the channel, and it is expected that the work will be fully commenced by July 1st, if not sooner. This will, it is estimated give us a uniform depth of twelve feet from Lake Michigan to Round Lake, which, with the extension of the piers, can be kept with little difficulty.

Col. Mansfield writes that he saw contractor Dale in Washington lately, and that gentleman proposes to complete his unfinished contract on the piers early in the summer.

CONFLAGRATION.—The residence and shop of Mr. Geo. W. Morgan, residing near the head of the lake, were entirely consumed by fire on the 21st inst. Nothing of value was saved. The fire originated from a defective stove-pipe. the building being of logs were not insurable. Mr. Morgan is a poor man and well advanced in years. He carred his livelihood by manufacturing chairs, but as his shop and all his tools were burned with his house, he is left without the means of support. Parties will remember him if we add that he is a colored man, and local preacher of the Methodist persuasion, and is well and favorably known in these parts. We are authorized to say that any assistance in the way of money, goods, provisions or tools will be thankfully received. Those willing to contribute, can leave their donations at this office, and we will promptly forward the same to him. We bespeak for Mr. Morgan the sympathy and charity of the benevolent in village and county, and sincerely hope he may be liberally aided. [illegible] giveth to the poor lendeth to the Lord.

MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

—Mr. Francis Galton is not inclined to consider consciousness as capable of much useful service in intellectual labor. "The more," he says, "I have examined the workings of my own mind, the less respect I had for the part played by consciousness. I begin, with others, to doubt its use altogether as a helpful supervisor, and to think that any best brain work is wholly independent of it. Its position appears to be that of a helpless spectator, of but a minute fraction of a huge amount of automatic brain-work."

—I have a friend who brought up a young lark by hand in his office in this city this summer. Now it is full-grown and so tame that it will come at call from any part of the house, in which it has entire freedom. It goes around striking its closed bill into the earth and then opening it, thus prying apart a hole into which it looks, first with one eye and then with the other, cocking its head in a very amusing way. If a paper is put near it, in goes the bill, and then it is opened, tearing a hole large enough for observation. The rents in the carpet and table-cloth also attest this inexhaustively inquisitive trait.—Science News.

—In the basin of the Teplitz Stadtbad, the recent stoppage of which has caused so much alarm in the charming Austrian watering-place, Roman coins and antiquities have been found. On one of the coins a female bust is represented with the circumscription "Sabina Augusta," (wife of the Emperor Hadrian, A. D. 117-138). The science must, therefore, have been well known to the Romans, and it is quite possible that even before the year 762, when it is first mentioned in Bohemian history, it may have temporarily ceased to flow. Besides the Roman coins, Bohemian and German coins (up to the year 1740) were discovered. —Nature.

—In Le Progres Medical, M. Galippe has called attention to the medico-legal value of the color of the human hair, and has given some new facts. He asserts that from the simple smell of a lock of hair he can tell whether the lock has been cut from the living subject or whether it has been composed of hair that has fallen out. Hairdressers have acquired this art, which is said never to fail them. Hair which has fallen out has a dull appearance, attributable to disease, and is not easily made up; it has no peculiar smell. The hair of the Chinese has a characteristic odor of musk, which is so persistent that it cannot be destroyed by washing with potash. The hair of the Chinese has also a reddish tinge, and is polycladral in section. Hair of hysterical patients has a peculiar and distinguishing odor which is most perceptible at the approach of a crisis. Certain hair is electrical, the electricity being developed more readily after rubbing. M. Bert states that hair which is turned white from fear begins to change color rather at the apex than at the base.

—The St. Louis Academy of Sciences has been throwing light upon the lightning-rod, concerning which, said Prof. Nipher, there are many popular delusions. One is, that if one or two rods outside an open box or cornice of metal be hollowed out, thus giving it greater expanse, its conductive power would be greater than that of the other. The truth is that they would be equally as good conductors. Another erroneous impression which the professor proceeded to dispel was that a current of electricity runs along the surface of a wire. In reality, it extends through the entire wire when the circuit is made, Mr. Nipher said, but when the circuit is closed it accumulates upon the surface of the conductor. A strong point made was that lightning-rods do not attract lightning. They are splendid conductors, much better than wood or air, and lightning strikes them because they offer the least resistance to the passage of the electric current. It makes no difference whether a point be on a lightning-rod or not, so far as the protection of buildings is concerned. The positive electricity in the earth will flow up into the wire and accumulate at the point, if there be one, making the tension and the conducting power greater, and enhancing the probability of lightning striking that rod in preference to another which has no point, but has the positive current disseminated through it equally.

How a Clever Attempt at Smuggling Was Detected.

A new and somewhat novel mode of smuggling has been discovered. On the arrival of the steamer Silesia from Hamburg, at her dock, she was boarded by the usual number of Custom-House Inspectors under Deputy-Surveyor Kilbee, who at once proceeded to take the luggage declarations of the cabin passengers. While thus engaged a richly-attired lady presented her card to Mr. Kilbee, one of the inspectors, and asked permission to go on board. She stated that her brother, Alfred A. Sohn, was among the passenger. Suspecting nothing wrong, the official granted the lady's request, and she quickly disappeared into the cabin. After a stay of about half an hour the lady reappeared. She wore a long, fur-lined, silk circular, which she did not bring on board with her. The inspectors accosted her and invited her to be searched. She was indignant. A thorough search of her person was made. Upon her were found twenty-three yards of black silk, three and a half dozen pairs of kid gloves, one roll of light silk, thirty napkins, four pieces of silk hose, forty-five pairs of merino hose, and five valuable highly-ornamented meerschaum pipes, and one cigar-holder. The lady reluctantly gave her name as Mrs. M. Lauterbach, of No. 167 East Sixty-fifth street. Deputy-Surveyor Kilbee then gave his attention to her brother, and was well rewarded. In trunks which Mr. Sohn claimed as his property the following articles were found: Five table-cloths, one dozen handkerchiefs, five table-covers, 500 cigars, and a quantity of miscellaneous articles of first-class manufacture.—*N. Queen Victoria's Lessons in Economy.

Queen Victoria has brought all her children up with ideas of strict economy. An illustration of one of the results is given in a Paris letter to the Boston Advertiser: "Her daughter who married the Crown Prince of Prussia is in this respect a child after her mother's own heart. On the occasion of a large dinner given not long ago, Her Royal Highness was seated at the table with her back turned to the buffet upon which carving took place, but on the other side of the room, directly opposite to her, a long mirror reflected faithfully what she was supposed to ignore, and thereby she saw—oh, horror of dishonesty—a head waiter take a chicken upon the fork, and instead of carving it for her guests, stick it, fork and all, into the wood under the table. After dinner Her Royal Highness went as usual to the kitchen to see what became of underworked food (for servants were not allowed to touch that) and there she counted five whole chickens. 'Where,' said this excellent housekeeper, 'is the sixth?' From the cook to the last waiterall declared that it must have been eaten. 'No,' said Her Royal Highness, 'there were twelve chickens; six were carved, here are five; where is the twelfth?' After listening to culpable protestations she singled out the delinquent as chief executioner, and, followed by all the others, marched into the dining-room, where, raising the cloth from the carving table, she brought the missing chicken to light, and the astonished thief was forthwith dismissed."

Biographical Sketch of the Late Gen. Dix.

NEW YORK, April 21.

Gen. John A. Dix died at 11:30 to-night, after lying in a profound and nearly unbroken coma for seventy-two hours. The last days of his illness were a long and painful attack of inflammation of the bladder, convalescence after four weeks of suffering, and, an accident a week ago Saturday that brought on the fatal relapse. Last Friday morning Gen. Dix was convinced that his end was near at hand, and took final leave of the few intimate friends who called at his house, among them Bishop Potter and the Rev. Dr. Sargent. He also received the Rev. Morgan Dix, and his last was his adjutant-general, Mr. Walsh, now residing in Japan. He then spent a few hours in more conversation with his wife, his son, the Rev. J. Morgan Dix, and Trinity, and his daughter, Mrs. Blake, who has constantly attended him. He was unusually lost conscious-ness, and at length slipped from a state of recoil, from which he did not once recover until the moment of his death. The attending physicians in attendance who predicted his speedy death on Friday night were astonished at the tenacity with which he clung to life. All last night he was reported visibly sinking, and to-night his extraordinary reserve of energy gave out. During the day the condition of the dying man underwent no perceptible alteration, until about four o'clock, when his failing respiration sensibly gave way, and the death gray crept gradually over his features. At 11:30 Dr. Oliver hastily summoned the members of the family, and they had scarcely arrived when the heart of the old man ceased to beat.

Gen. Dix leaves a large fortune, but no self-reliant and reserved was he that only the nearest partisans of it are known to his only son, Dr. Morgan Dix. The disposition of his real estate and other property will not be known to his own family until the will be offered for probate.

The deceased was the son of Lieut.-Col. Timothy Dix, of the Revolutionary Army, and was born in Boscawen, N. H., July 24, 1798. True to the Revolutionary antecedents, he entered the army when a mere lad, serving in the war of 1812-15, first as an Ensign, and afterward as Adjutant of a regiment. Later he was Aide to three Brevet Commander-in-Chief of the army. In 1828, having resigned his rank in the army, he settled in Cooperstown, N. Y., as a lawyer, and soon entered politics, espousing the principles of the Democratic party, and was made Adjutant-General of the State, and in 1833 was chosen Secretary of State. He became a member of the General Assembly in 1842, and in 1845 was elected United States Senator to fill the unexpired term of Silas Wright, serving in that capacity four years. During that time he bore a part in the discussions on the annexation of Texas, the Mexican War, the Oregon dispute and the question of slavery in the Territories, espousing the views of the Free-Soil Democrats, whose successful candidate for Governor he was in 1848. He was chairman of the Senate Committee on Commerce, and a leading member of that on Military Affairs.

Being an active supporter of Gen. Franklin Pierce for the Presidency, he was at first neglected by that gentleman for his Secretary of State, but subsequently, Gen. Dix declining in favor of Gov. Marcy. In 1853 he accepted, temporarily, the post of Assistant-Treasurer of the United States, at New York City. He was Postmaster of New York City in 1859, and in December, 1860, was appointed by President Buchanan Secretary of the Treasury, in place of Howell Cobb, serving in that capacity till the incoming of Mr. Lincoln's Administration. While Secretary of the Treasury, he issued the memorable order: "If any man attempt to haul down the American flag, shoot him on the spot."

Immediately on the inception of civil war Gen. Dix took strong and decided ground in favor of the Government and the Union. He was appointed Major-General of the New York National troops in the opening of the war, and was confirmed Major-General of the United States Volunteers May 16, 1861, subsequently receiving the same rank in the regular army. In 1862 he had charge of the Department of Maryland, and, during the anti-draft riots in New York in 1863, he was in command there, and quelled them. After the close of the war he was sent to Paris as Minister to the Tuileries in 1866. In 1872 he was elected Governor of New York, being defeated for re-election in 1874 by Samuel J. Tilden. Since then Gen. Dix has lived in retirement, spending much time in literary work, to which he had always devoted a large portion of his leisure time. For several years Gen. Dix has had charge of the finances of Trinity Church, New York City, of which his son is Rector.

COOKING-SCHOOLS are said to have been remarkably successful in Philadelphia.

The Attempted Assassination of Edwin Booth.

The Chicago Tribune of the 24th gives the following account of the attempt, the night before, upon the life of the tragedian, Booth:

Shakespeare's historical drama of Richard III. came within an ace last evening of ending in a tragedy in real life. Edwin Booth, who personated the King, was shot at while on the stage of McVicker's Theatre by Mark Gray, a dry-goods clerk from St. Louis. The double-barreled gun was fobbed by a resident of Keokuk, but subsequently moved to St. Louis, from where he now hails. In an interview with a Tribune reporter he claimed that some years ago Mr. Booth inflicted one of his friends—whether man or woman he declined to state—and that for two years and a half he had made up his mind to kill him. Although he talks quite rationally, the indications are that he is deranged to a certain extent, how far none but experts can determine. A letter written by him to a young lady in Keokuk, found on his person, reads as if he had been at one time stage-struck, and had given some little attention to dramatic criticism.

THE EVENTFUL SCENE.

The bell rang, the lights had been turned down, and the curtain rose to palative noise upon the third scene of the fifth act. Before unsealing the dungeon of Pomfret Castle, where Richard was imprisoned in royalty and in bed, in the manner of his death is exhibited. Those familiar with the play of "Richard III." remember the setting of the scene. The stage is darkened. In the flat there is a small grated window through which shine the moonbeams. To the right stands a rough table and stool, at which Richard is discovered. Mr. Booth, dressed in a somber costume, seated there, began his reverie:

"I have been studying how I may compare this prison where I live unto the world."

The audience were attentive and the actor, of course, completely engrossed by his soliloquy, had reached the line—

"For no thought is contented—"

when the would-be assassin, who was seated in the pit, at the discordant moment, left his seat, stood up and deliberately fired a pistol-shot at Mr. Booth, which missed its mark, fortunately. When the shot was fired, neither the audience nor Mr. Booth realized what the matter was. The former thought it was part of the business of the scene, and the actor surmised that a pistol belonging to some of the audience had gone off by mistake. They all remained perfectly still until the fellow again leveled his weapon at Booth, and again fired, the shot making a hole in the fat about three feet from where the actor sat. Then at this second discharge the audience became alive to the situation, and a yell of horror went up which was heard half a block away. Women screamed and men rushed for the aisle, the villain, some shouting to throw him over the gallery, while others wanted a lynching. Meanwhile John, the officer of the theater, had rushed him and prevented the discharge of another shot. Mr. Booth, to the midst of the consternation and excitement, very gracefully undertook to step forward to the footlights to assure his audience of his safety, and, addressing the house, he said his captors. Fortunately the scene was a long one, and Booth, by the time he got from the villain, some shouting to throw him over the gallery, while others wanted a lynching. Meanwhile John, the officer of the theater, had rushed him and prevented the discharge of another shot. Mr. Booth, to the midst of the consternation and excitement, very gracefully undertook to step forward to the footlights to assure his audience of his safety, and, addressing the house, he said his captors. Fortunately the scene was a long one, and Booth, by the time he got from being a hero of the setting, I came to Chicago to see Booth. But I was sadly mistaken. I would take Booth one year of constant acting in comparison with Lawrence Barrett. Barrett one night he plays Richard II., Essie, if I go to-night he will kill me or I kill. So all Shakespeare works I find but one man to compete with Booth and that is Barrett. So I determined to kill one that since I call Booth 'Jags,' he could no more play 'Richelieu' than the devil could be an angel. I don't no what the devil you will write I guess the fleer as I bought a few rings in the market. I am sorry I came here, for I think the slanging a rage for me. Remember me to your mother and sister. Yours truly,

The above was written in a fair hand, bold and strong at first, but hesitating and nervous toward the end. It was written in pencil, and addressed to Miss Katie Davern, Keokuk, Iowa.

After a short tarry at the Central he was led off to the Armory. En route he talked in a rational and yet careless and indifferent way. He again said that he had come to Chicago purposely to kill Booth, and he was sorry that he had not done it. Reaching the Armory, he walked boldly, and yet not defiantly, up to the rail, and in reply to the questions of the station-keeper said that his name was Mark Gray, age twenty-three, single, and a dry-goods salesman by profession. He was conducted to a cell below.

"Please Let Her Go Home."

"Please, sir, to let mamma go home with us. If you send her away there'll be no one to take care of little Alice; and then she's so good to all of us. We won't let her go away again; and—and get drunk; and she won't want to, we love her so. Please to let her go."

"But doesn't your mother spend her money for drink which ought to buy you bread and butter?"

"Only once in a while, sir; then never was a better mamma than ours, and we'll take such good care of her and be so good that she won't want any more whisky, 'cause it's that, sir, which makes her bad ones in a while."

"What have you to say, madam? You have been let off so many times on good promises that I am losing faith in you."

"Your Honor, I know I don't deserve any mercy at your hands, but for the sake of these dear little children let me try once more to be the good mother they think I am. God only knows why I can't help drinking, and why I should degrade myself by getting drunk and then abusing these innocent little children. I thought this would be the last time, and that they would be so much better off without me, that I said I would drown myself, and I was angry when a policeman pulled me out of the lake and saved my miserable life. I don't do anything to feel and clothe them; why do they love and pity me so? I only spend their hard-earned money for drink. How much better for them if I could be dead! More than all remained perfectly still until the fellow again leveled his weapon at Booth, and again fired, the shot making a hole in the fat about three feet from where the actor sat. Then at this second discharge the audience became alive to the situation, and a yell of horror went up which was heard half a block away. Women screamed and men rushed for the aisle, the villain, some shouting to throw him over the gallery, while others wanted a lynching. Meanwhile John, the officer of the theater, had rushed him and prevented the discharge of another shot. Mr. Booth, to the midst of the consternation and excitement, very gracefully undertook to step forward to the footlights to assure his audience of his safety, and, addressing the house, he said his captors. Fortunately the scene was a long one, and Booth, by the time he got from being a hero of the setting, I came to Chicago to see Booth. But I was sadly mistaken. I would take Booth one year of constant acting in comparison with Lawrence Barrett. Barrett one night he plays Richard II., Essie, if I go to-night he will kill me or I kill. So all Shakespeare works I find but one man to compete with Booth and that is Barrett. So I determined to kill one that since I call Booth 'Jags,' he could no more play 'Richelieu' than the devil could be an angel. I don't no what the devil you will write I guess the fleer as I bought a few rings in the market. I am sorry I came here, for I think the slanging a rage for me. —An excellent method for starting cuttings, is to partly sever the desired portion, leaving it sufficiently in connection with the main plant to preserve thrifty growth; when a callus is formed on the end of the cutting it may be transferred to its own pot and will root without difficulty.—Prairie Farmer.

—Hiumel und Erde.—Take six large potatoes and six mellow apples; peel them and boil them separate in different vessels; drain both and put the apples in the potatoes; mash thoroughly and add butter and salt. (This is a simple Westphalian dish, and, though peculiar to our taste, is in common use among the German peasants.)

—Camping and fishing parties can obtain a good light by soaking a brick in kerosene oil for ten minutes. The brick absorbs the oil, and, being suspended with wires and ignited, a brilliant light, lasting half an hour, is obtained. This is said by those who have experimented with it, to be greatly superior to the torch in general use. It is rather early to talk of camping out, but the time is coming, and then this recipe will be appreciated. It is a "spree" of several days. Their enormities have always been in vain, and at length had nationally submitted to this affliction in their otherwise happy life, and tried to keep her from drink.

The children are all honest and industrious, and have made the most of their narrow resources for improvement mentally. They are highly respected by the neighbors and deserve encomiums for their filial affection much as for other virtues deserve. The eldest have accepted themselves in earning money; the younger in staying faithfully at home and caring for the six-year-old helpless little sister. The family consists of eight children, and, when it is considered that but two of them succeed in teaching in any degree for the support of the whole, the circumstances approach nearer to the pitiful.—Chicago Times.

How Argus Went Sliding.

I was sitting beside my window, a few days ago, sewing, and watching the boys across the street. They had made a long slide along the icy pavement, and were having great sport, running with all speed toward the slide, and leaping their feet firm while they shot over it toward the snow-bank on the other side.

A large Newfoundland dog was with the children, racing after them and barking joyfully at the fun.

For some time Argus contented himself with frolicking along the edge of the slide, but I suppose at last his dogship grew tired of watching the merry sport and had decided to try for himself the fun of it.

I dropped my sewing for a moment to enjoy the sight of those rosy-cheeked, happy children, amongst whom were my own boys, when, to my surprise and amusement, I saw the dog seamper to the farther end of the slide, and take position with the boys for a run.

Presently, when the last boy had gone on, Mr. Argus followed suit with a quick bark, and, lowering his head, then planting his four feet firmly together, he also slid over it as the boys had done, and, when he reached the snow-bank, the poor fellow, unable to stop himself, plunged into it and rolled over and over.

When he emerged to view, covered with snow, and shaking his shaggy coat, I fancied that he actually laughed in dog-fashion at his mishap as the boys, and they—such a roar of laughter never was heard before, I'll warrant, from a like number of children in this country of farming, says, among other things, than he has long since come to the conclusion that not one among ten corn-growers deserves the name of "a good corn-grower." Men could be pointed out who have been farming thirty or forty years, and are to-day no better in this respect. He then goes on to say that they don't know that they have been half farming all their lives. A thirty-five or thirty-eight bushel crop, he says, is a mean crop, and there are many crops that will not yield over twenty bushels to the acre. Some of the crops that break up both tenant and landlord. The writer then says that most of the good land is now in good condition, and the population, which was barely 300 eighty years ago, amounted in 1876 to 13,500 in the city alone. A rich Jew in Venice has founded and endowed a school of agriculture with several thousand pounds, so that the country seems in a fair way to recover some of its old fertility.

THE SENTINEL

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLIAM D. A. SMITH, EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, MAY 6, 1879.

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, April 29, 1879.

EDITOR SENTINEL:

The increasing success of the rapid transit lines in New York proportionately increases the apprehensions of the denizens to whose alarm lest they should lose the best class of their pop ulation, I referred in a previous letter. A conference was held in Newark this week, presided over by the Mayor of that industrial burgh, and attended by representatives of the many railroads interested in the carrying of New York's suburban population, at which the threatening danger was frankly recognized and a proposition discussed to make a sweeping reduction in fares over all lines lines to stem the dreaded exodus to Manhattan Island. Some such step as this will doubtless be taken, and it will be a piece of poetic justice as magnificent as it is rare for the avaricious corporations to do the means of securing substantial results to a large and long suffering public.

The new accessibility of the upper part of this island, which these elevated roads have brought about, and which they will ultimately perfect, carries a marvel interest to attach to a large area about Central Park, which in spite of the fact that it lies almost at our very doors is as thoroughly terra incognita to nine hundred and ninety nine out of every thousand New Yorkers as Kamschatka or Patagonia. West of the Park where it needs no prophet to foretell the growth of serried ranks of brown stone fronts within the life of the present generation, is at present a tract of land hundreds of acres in extent which has for years been given over to the occupancies of a squatter sovereignty. I speak of this section as "vacant" by courtesy only. In point of fact it is one lunar waste of barren and frozen rocks which only here and there a mass of metal big enough for a modest potato patch. No decent structure is anywhere visible, nothing but cemetery shanties built of refuse boards, ticketty sheds perched up on the builders with roofs only about half covered with bits of waste tin and refuse felt roofing. Paint is a stranger to this neighborhood, and whitewashglass exists for the most part only in a shattered condition. These shanties contain one, two or three rooms, and each shelters a family more or less numerous—usually more—together with its proper feudal appendages in the way of pigs, goats, chickens and less useful domestic animals.

Many of the residents of this queer locality live in voluntary or involuntary idleness, while others are hard working people who have some trade by which they earn a scanty subsistence. Ash collectors, bone pickers, junk dealers, oil peddlers, garbage men and street scavengers are among the number. For the most parts the squatters are Germans and Irish, and only occasionally is one of another nationality or a negro family found. Here and there is a little plot of garden vegetables, which somehow seem to be preserved from the vandalism one would naturally expect in such a place. The community is complete in itself, having its tailors, shoemakers, grocery stores and saloons all within its own confines. As may be imagined, the cost of living in this region is not extravagant. I should judge, from my own rather cursory observation, that the average income of one of these squatters families will not exceed three or four dollars a week, but I venture to say they are full as happy as some other Gothamites whose outer condition offers a striking contrast to their own.

Such, for instance, as those who inhabit our very "swellest" apartment houses, and who, by reason of their wranglings and scandals are frequently brought into unpleasant prominence, a result possibly of the unnatural glitter and flash amidst which they live. The tendency toward increasing gorgeousness in these rapidly multiplying tenements has at last brought the most expensive among them to an absurd pitch of gaudy luxury. There is one such house on Fifth avenue, the proprietor of which testified in a recent lawsuit that it cleared him $16,000 during two of the least profitable months of 1878. A few months ago I saw a full description of this luxurious establishment, from which I cut out a few particulars to preserve as a curiosity.

From this account it appears that the furniture and pictures in the general parlor of the house cost $40,000. Throughout the building satin is the favorite material for upholstery, while the floors are marble mosaic, covered with thick Turkish rugs, and the ceilings deeply paneled, and covered with gold and frescoing in every nook and corner. The following is the description given of the elevator of this structure: "Of course there is an elevator, for the building is nine stories high. And the elevator is a bit of a thing out of fairy land. Its four delicate walls are covered with shining mirrors, the joints concealed with narrow strips of pink velvet. From the roof hangs a chandelier composed of a thousand pieces of sparking glass, tinkling with the motion, and sending their bright reflections everywhere. The young gentlemen who operates this gorgeous machine is dressed in a swallow tail coat, white tie, hair parted in the middle, lace shoes and black kid gloves. He looks nice enough for a Grand Duke's ball, but he smells of lard oil."

Your readers will hardly need to be told that it costs something to live in this place. One suite of four rooms costs its occupant $240 per week, while another somewhat larger though higher up was leased for ten months by a gentleman presumably more richly endowed with money than brains, for $10,000. In each of these cases the price named was for room rent only, and did not include board, either for the gentleman, his family or his servants. All that was extra. He might eat as the restaurant in the house if he chose, or he could go wherever he pleased; but whatever he or his ate he must pay extra for. He paid $240 a week merely for the four rooms. Either gentleman's expenses for board and lodging for himself and wife, two children and three servants would exceed $400 a week, and very likely reach $500. How is that for republican simplicity?

I shall have given so much space to the two extremes of the metropolitan tumult that I have little room for the news of the week. There is no lunar done, however, for news is rather a scarce article at this moment. All the occurrences which I now recall as in any way worthy of mention are the death and funeral of the valuable John A. Dix, a severe accident to August Belmont—he was thrown from his carriage by a street collision—which caused a momentary flurry among the financiers, the somewhat lame conclusion of the Talmage trial, and ludicrous episode at a meeting of the Board of Aldermen arising out of the Mayor's failing to address them in some official communication as "Honorable," whereby their dignity was severely damaged, the opening of the hydrophobia season by two deaths from bites of the same dog, and the farewell concert of Miss Clara Louise Kellogg, at which she received quite an ovation, on the eve of her departure for Europe, and was presented with an elegant diamond star by a number of admirers.

Have you seen "Scribner's" for May? What a rich number it is, and what a proof it affords of the progress of this generation in magazine making. That one article on Brazil must have cost a sum that would have published a whole magazine of twenty years ago. It necessitated a special expedition, hired, equipped and sent forth by the publishers, and forms the first of a series of papers which will furnish the most practical, accurate and entertaining information regarding this great country, with which our commercial relations are destined to be so intimate, ever placed before North American readers. The edition of this issue reached 95,000 copies, and was distributed all over the English speaking globe. Some idea of the immense bulk of such an edition may by gathered from the fact that, supposing each copy to be 3-8 of an inch thick, the 95,000, piled up, would make a tower of paper and printing ink nearly 9,000 feet high, or about twenty times as high as Niagara Falls.

RADIX.

High Lowe, Jack, and the Game.

Awhile ago Gen. Logan, familiarly called "Jack" "in Egypt," made a speech in the Senate, in which he said some rasping things of the Confederate brigadiers. This made the Confederate brigadiers mad, particularly Confederate Brigadier Lowe, of Alabama, member of the House. Being angry, in his temper Lowe repeated to a Democratic newspaper reporter the old slander, long ago exploded, that Jack Logan in 1861 raised three regiments in southern Illinois for the Confederate service. This always was an inexcusable lie, without one particle of fact for a bottom; and, as was said above, the slander was long ago completely exploded. Gen. Logan has, however, been looking out for any responsible man to repeat it, so that he might give it a little personal attention. As soon, therefore, as the reporter had published Lowe's remarks, Gen. Logan, in a card which he published in the National Republican, showed how the slander arose, how it was completely refuted by the testimony of the very Confederate officer who commanded the only regiments ever raised for the rebels in Illinois, and then Gen. Logan wound up his card as follows:

The statement I brand as false and slanderous, and Col. Lowe and the reporter can settle the question between themselves as to which one has been guilty of perpetrating this villainous falsehood.

Very respectfully,

JOHN A. LOGAN.

This public hauling us a liar really hurt the tender feelings of the southern Confederate Lowe. It seemed to rasp his "honah," as it were. True, he should have thought of that before he tackled up Gen. Logan, who is a bad customer to provoke. Col. Lowe, seeing no other way to heal his injured "honah," sent Gen. Pelham, of Alabama, to Gen. Logan with a letter in the nature of a challenge. Gen. Logan contemptuously refused to receive any letter or message from Col. Lowe, unless the letter or message contained an apology to him (Logan) from Lowe for his villainous falsehood about him (Logan). When Lowe's messenger returned with this report, Lowe was mad. He held a consultation with Colonels Withers and Pelham, of Alabama, and sent another challenge which Gen. Logan declined to receive on notice, and told Col. Pelham, the bearer, that Lowe was a liar, and he could go back to Lowe and tell him that he (Logan) would receive no communication from such a liar, unless it was a square apology. Then there were more consultations of five-eaters; and finally Lowe, not venturing to assault Logan, concluded to publish a card in the newspapers, in which he denounced Gen. Logan rather mildly. He prudently says in his card that he will not brand John A. Logan as a liar, for he is a Senator of the United States." The real meaning of this is probably that he will not brand John A. Logan as a liar because, if he did, he feels confident that John A. Logan would smash him just as quickly as he could hunt him down. He adds that he will not post John A. Logan as a "scoundrel and poltroon," for that would violate the law, and subject himself to jail. Besides, the whole country would laugh at such a ridiculous charge against a man of Logan's often proved courage. And it wouldn't be safe. But Lowe concludes that he will publish Logan "as one who knows how to insult but not how to satisfy a gentleman, and I invoke upon him the judgment of honorable men of the community." This is weak, because no gentleman would repeat the lying slander by repeating which Lowe got himself into this scrape. Gen. Logan has not insulted "a gentleman," and the judgment of all "honorable men" will agree to . They are already laughing over the ridiculous fix in which Lowe has involved himself. What will be the conclusion of the game remains to be seen. Gen. Logan laughs at the whole affair. It will probably ruin Lowe in Alabama, unless he manages to get even with Logan in some way. Logan will not fight a duel; but everybody knows that he is a fighting man all over and clear through. He has taken exactly the right course so far.—Post and Tribune.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

Domestic.

ABOUT one-half of the business portion of the Town of Kinsley, Kan., was destroyed by fire, on the morning of the 21st. Loss, $75,000.

SHE'T SHERMAN, on the 21st, issued the ninety-ninth call for the redemption of bonds—this call being for $25,500,300 of 10-40 bonds of 1864. Principal and interest will be paid on and after July 21, interest to cease on that day.

THE Superior Court of Cook County, Ill., has set aside the recent sale of the building property of the suspended Fidelity Savings Bank, on the ground that it was sold too cheaply.

SHE'T SHERMAN has ordered a revenue steamer to proceed to Alaska for the protection of the Government interests in that Territory.

On the 22d, the first Treasury warrant for the payment of arrears of pensions was signed in Washington. It was thought that $100,000 could be paid as rapidly as the accounts could be made up, or at the rate of $1,500,000 a month, unless unexpected appropriations are hereafter made by Congress.

A FIRE in Eureka, Nev., while a heavy wind was prevailing, early on the morning of the 22d, burned over a space of one-half mile in length, on Spring, Burl and Main streets. The fire commenced at about $1,000,000, on which there was not over $250,000 insurance. Cold weather, accompanied by a fall of snow, succeeded the fire, causing much suffering among the homeless people. There was no lack of food or provisions, the people escaping the flames.

AT Pennsdorff, Pa., on the night of the 23d, three children were burned to death by the explosion of a coal-oil lamp in their sleeping room.

On the morning of the 23d, the roof of a mine belonging to the Wilkesbarre Coal and Iron Company, near Wilkesbarre, Pa., fell in, imprisoning five miners who were at work in the chambers at the bottom of the shaft, and also crushing two boys who were sent to the mine to warn the men of the danger. It was thought the men could not be reached before life would be extinct.

THE Notre Dame University, near South Bend, Ind., was entirely destroyed by fire, on the morning of the 24th. No loss of life was reported. The total loss was estimated at $250,000, insurance, $60,000. Among the most remarkable is the fact that the watch on the note is counted with a pen and ink. All the interior fixtures, all the furniture, all the beds, the seal, the fine engraving work, and even the files in the press are almost perfect. It is counterfeit in the pen and ink. The signature of John Allison, formerly Register of the Treasury, is almost exact, while that of John C. New, formerly Treasurer, is perfect. The whole bill, back and face, is pronounced a wonderful piece of pen work. It was detected at the Sub-Treasury in New Orleans.

CHARLES H. HASTINGS, conductor on the Old Colony Railroad, charged with manslaughter in causing the accident at Weymouth, Mass., some time ago, was found guilty, on the 24th.

SIX men, named Charles Drews, Frank Stebbler, Henry Wise, Josiah Hemard, Israel Brandt and George Zeebman, on trial at Lebanon, Pa., for murdering an old man named Joseph Raber, in order to obtain the insurance on his life, have been found guilty, the jury rendering their verdict after five hours' deliberation. The amount of insurance held by the murderers on the life of their victim was $10,000, divided among six companies.

On the evening of the 24th, burglars broke open the safe of the Laconia (N. H.) National Bank, secured about $6,000 in cash and a quantity of securities.

JESSE POMEROY, the Boston boy-murderer, made an unsuccessful attempt, on the 26th, to escape from the Massachusetts State Prison, by sawing through the bars of his cell.

E. B. RICHARDS, the Kansas murderer, who, before his death, confessed to having murdered from twelve to twenty persons during his career, was hung at Minden, Kearney County, Kan., on the 25th.

THE trial, in Chicago, of Peter E. Sievens, for the murder of his girl-wife, last year, ended, on the 25th, in a verdict of manslaughter, the jury fixing the penalty at fourteen years in the Penitentiary. The trial lasted three weeks. After the rendering of the verdict, Mrs. Young, the mother of the murdered woman, attempted to shoot the prisoner as he was being taken from the court-room, but a handkerchief she held in her hand accidently caught under the hammer of the pistol and prevented its discharge. She was immediately unarmed and taken to her home, where she was prostrated with a severe sickness, insanity and brain fever being threatened.

IT was reported from New Orleans, on the 26th, that the Migration Relief Association (colored) had formally organized, and was prepared for correspondence with similar associations West, North and East. The Rev. C. H. Thompson is Chairman. A telegram from Vidalia, Concordia Parish, reported that 2,000 negroes were there on the river bank, awaiting transportation Kaiserward. A Manhattan (Kan.) dispatch of the same date says the arrival there of 300 colored refugees had the effect of setting the people to work providing for them. They were well sheltered and cared for, and arrangements were being made to procure them work on farms and in families. A committee had been appointed to solicit aid.

Intense excitement followed the dastardly act, and the perpetrator was rescued before he could fire the third time. Mr. Booth was unharmed. It was thought to cause that Gray was insane, but he stated in a report that he had been trying for two years to assassinate Booth. He is from St. Louis, and twenty-three years of age. He positively refused to give the motive which led to the attempt on Booth's life. The police-force says it was supposed that some morbid feeling regarding the assassination of President Lincoln by Wilkes Booth, or the participation of a near connection of the latter in the assassination, was the cause of the crime.

THE mother sits meditatively in her cage, holding the little one tight to her bosom. Presently she rises, and glancing around with quick suspicious glances at everything and everybody. Part of the time she will sit next to the partition that separates her apartment from the main cage, and call a levee of her friends, and as if to hold a circle of admiration. One large female mandrill will sit for hours at the partition watching the little one, and, with its puffed-up purple-hued cheeks, looking as if it were mourning in solitary widowhood and envying the happy mother. Whenever she can reach little Buttercup the mandrill pokes its fingers through the wires of the cage, as if it were a luxury to touch the baby even, and gives some shrill notes of satisfaction in doing so.

At one time the keeper, to show the affection of the mother relative to the use of the baby as a plaything, gave the child with her husband and certain members of the police through scores and scores of curious and odd capers in the black heart of the city. Only one of them all, though, she remembered in particular. It had made her shudder so; there was an old crone with a sinister laugh, smoking the stump of a pipe in a huddle of rags. Beside the old hags and shaken them, one and all, but they were none of hers. The place was an underground, filthy and squalid, more loathsome to the senses and more oppressive to the soul, than others she had seen. It seemed to make her heart stand still as she entered, and she had not spoken a dozen words with the old hag before she fainted. And after that her husband was reluctant to have her continue such visits.

But the visit made, perhaps, no more impression on her than it did on the dwellers of that den. One day "the pretty lady came with the cop" was a bar charge, worrying the cat, feeding the birds, varnishing the chairs with the smudges, decorating the wall with the fingers dipped in the ink bottle, breaking the precious flowers from the stem for some unwelcome guest, knowing no difference between servants and masters, and having kisses for all, always serious and always loving in the midst of his preoccupations and mischief, the little fellow was the idol of home and of the region round about. One night as they all sat in the playroom by a fire (it being rainy outside), when the games had failed any longer to amuse, each one recited some verse already learned; and while thus engaged, it was found that Cyrus had been printing on the bit of a blackboard, in uncouth but very recognizable characters, the letters of the alphabet; and when the others had said their say, he came and stood by his mother's knee, and repeated the "Better Land," in his sweet, serious voice and baby pistols.

As Mrs. Dean went through the playroom, later, with a candle in her hand, those characters on the blackboard flared up like the handwriting on the wall, and made her shiver, as she afterward remembered, she knew not why. She passed through into the nurseries, and saw her little people all gently sleeping there; but somehow her heart seemed to linger the longest round Cyrus, as he lay with the coverings tossed to the winds, and his yellow curls streaming round his face in its rosy slumber like a nimbus.

The next night that little bed was vacant, and bands of men were searching the country far and wide for Cyrus; the father rode, half frantic, from one place to another; the mother, after the first, staid at home and wrung her hands, the other children clinging dumb and awe-struck to her skirts. The boy had been stolen.

Only those that clasp their own babies, and think what might befall the darlings in some such dreadful unknown, can realize the agony that night and day brought to those parents for weeks and months. A life to tell of that grief, of the efforts that were made, of the fortune that was spent, of the sleepless days and nights, of the picture of the little head on the pillow that last night hung constantly before the mother's eyes, all his charming little sayings were in her mind; and could see him tearing up bits of paper as he leaned out of the window, and, as each one softly floated away, repeating the lines about the death-song of the swan—"Floating down by he'set to die;" she remembered the absorbed way in which he would look up, declaring, "I bushy now!" the unconscious way in which he also pronounced his naughtiness, he made her to "take it eazhy;" his "volorble papers;" in short, all the things in which he had been just one little man among millions—all the things that altogether made up that night little Sam began his career of house-breaking.

But all of little Sam's share in the transaction was a mystery. Inchoate terror of what would happen to him if he did not do as he was told. And as for what the men did after he let them in, Mr. Dean had agents everywhere throughout the country, and was constantly on the alert himself, up and down, and his little son. Yet anything that could be done was done; he should be growing up in the hands of those who enough to abduct him. No reason for the stealing was ever appeared; no message or messenger from the robbers had ever made any overture to the father for a ransom. They began to hope that the dear child had died. Sometimes his mother feared that she could no longer control her reason; her head throbbed, throbbed, and she could hardly allow the other children out of her sight. She knew well that it would be better for her if she could go about among people; if the poor; if she could lose herself in trying to assuage those of others. But it seemed to her that slight of the trouble of others would but aggravate her own trouble. Nor had she anything to give in charity; she felt that every dollar must be saved for spending in the search for her little boy. She was ready and eager to sell her great white diamonds—each one of which was a small fortune, and all of generations, that had descended to the children with its great ringing vibrations before the butler put it away after any state dinner—to pay the ransom demanded by the robbers. But it was plainly impossible to get it, as it were, a bribe to break the growing practice of convicts themselves to escape work.—Columbus (Ohio) Cor. Cleveland Plaindealer.

THE CHARLEVOIX BRIDGE TAX.

The Other Side of the Question as Seen by Mr. Nettleton.

We have received the following communication relating to the bridge tax, in which the other side of the question is presented by a citizen of Charlevoix:

Will you permit a few words on the other side of the bridge question? When the first settlers came to Charlevoix county, they found the rivers between Lake Michigan and Pine Lake quite shallow, being navigable only for canoes and Mackinaw boats, and so an expensive bridge sufficed for all necessary crossing, but as the settlements clustered around the shores of Pine Lake, there came to be a growing demand for the widening and deepening of the channel, so as to admit vessels. To this end, the people contributed generally, to the extent of their ability, whilst the inhabitants from all around the lake came down to help dig the river wider and deeper, and thus for the annual benefit make an expensive bridge necessary. They had a chance to observe and decide intelligently as to their claims for aid in the bridge matter, as there the vote fully shows. The village of Charlevoix expended about $2,000 in the work directly, besides individual efforts and contributions, too numerous to mention.

This was only the commencement; the grand purpose to dig a ship channel through the bar, that vessels might pass by to interior points. Even now, the expense of operating the bridge is no trifling matter, in view of the fact that not one vessel in ten loads fully at Charlevoix. It is safe to assume that the cause must be a righteous one, wherein people vote to pay for a thing after they have accomplished their purpose and have the thing in their possession, and this one fact should forever silence the absurd croaking of the minority.

Now, having the possession, they will walk serenely over their beautiful bridge with the justified consciousness that for every dollar they have received in aid from the county at large, they have paid the debt an hundred fold.

I write these simple facts for your information, trusting that when you come to know that the bridge law was in accordance with laws passed by a resolution of the representatives of the people, justified by the Attorney General, and sanctioned by the voice of all concerned, you may recognize the fact that there is another side to the Charlevoix bridge question.

We ask our readers to pardon any shortcomings they may notice in the SENTINEL. We have been absorbed in the duty of superintending the construction and arrangement of our new rooms. THE LECTURE.—Rev. A. P. Morrison, of Cheboygan, delivered his lecture "Christianity in the Second Century," at the M. C. Church on Monday evening last. Back to the average audience would be appreciation of this lecture, but as a historical essay, woven together with threads from the writings of eminent historians, and burnished with gems of original thought, it was a success. It denoted study and research, and to a class of the logical students would have been a feast.

ANOTHER MEMBER IN ANTRIM COUNTY.—The octogenarian historian Bargy, of Torch Lake, Antrim County, met a violent death on Saturday morning last. He had shut up the cattle of Wallace Clow, and Clow went to Bargy's premises demanding their release. Bargy refused, threatening to shoot Clow if he did not leave, at the same time sending his boy to the house after his gun. Words increased when Bargy struck at Clow, who stepped back, cocked his gun and shot Bargy dead. The affair has created little feeling in the county where both parties were known, and the popular expressions are rather of relief at Bargy's taking off than otherwise. The deceased has always borne a very bad reputation, and it is strongly suspected that he poisoned his wife last fall. On the other hand, Clow bears a good reputation, a prominent citizen of Antrim County expressed the belief here Saturday that a jury could not be found in the county that would convict Clow. He gave himself up immediately after the shooting.

The fare will be 75 cents for the round trip from the bridge, or 50 cents from the head.

We are ready now to sell you every thing you want, for we have just received as nice a stock of dry goods as ever came to Charlevoix. We have got a nice assortment of ladies clokes, linen dusters, ladies suit for 1.50, and nice line of summer shawls. Call and see for yourself, we will be too glad to show you our goods. Letter from Banks.

ATWOOD, Mich., May 16, 1879.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

Your paper is quite extensively read in this community, and as we are so near Charlevoix, may be a few local items from this place now and then would be acceptable. This is a quiet farming community, and there can be nothing startling from such a vicinity. Births and marriages are such a common occurrences that they have ceased to awaken any surprise. Even the marriage of Capt. Strong, of the sailing vessel Union, to Miss Hellen Thompson, of Torch Lake, passed off so quietly that nobody's equilibrium was lost, (unless their own—Ed.) The only contemporaneous event was "the first run of suckers." Success to the happy pair. Esq Knight, who's riding recently, Jehu like, had what might have been a serious fall, stepping on a stone his horse came down upon his knees, and the Squire came down over his horse's head with such force as to stun him for a few moments, blackened both his eyes, and wrenched his corporosity generally. We are happy to say that he was not telescoped; the small clearing on the top of his head has not been perceptibly enlarged. We congratulate the Squire and his highly esteemed family on his escape from serious injury.

The farmers of Banks are rushing things with their characteristic energy, most of the wheat is up and looking well. The usual amount of wheat, oats, barley and peas, will be sown this spring, the latter crop is extensively raised for Philadelphia seedmen. Mr. H. Knight is sowing some 30 acres. Mr. Will Flanagin, our enterprising young merchant is filling up his store with new goods, which in price and quality will compare favorably with any assortment in the Bay. More anon.

BANKS.

NOTICE.—A Lodge of I. O. of G. T., will be instituted, to be organized Friday evening of this week, by Rev. H. P. Blake special D. D. G. W. C. T. This will meet a long felt want and be the means, we hope, of enlisting our young people in the cause of temperance.

—P. J. Mueh has already sent one schooner loaded with ties to Chicago, and leads another this week.

We notice our pastor, Rev. H. P. Blake, is again moving around and hope he will be ready for duty soon.

—Mr. Upthegrove, of Eastport, is understood to be quite low with heart disease. He has the earnest wishes of a large circle of acquaintances for his recovery.

—Burnard Burns, of Marion Is, we hear, quite sick, also Mrs. Geo. Anderson of the same place. X X.

TEACHERS' INSTITUTE.—A State Teachers' Institute for the counties of Emmet and Charlevoix will commence at Petoskey Monday, May 26, and continue up to and including the Friday following. It is expected that educators from various parts of the State will be present to give instructions during the day sessions, and several evening lectures will be delivered. An excellent opportunity thus occurs for our young teachers to improve themselves in the art of teaching, and no teacher who has a desire to make teaching a success can well afford to remain at home during the session of this institute. We hope that a large delegation of Charlevoix county teachers will attend.

To the people of Charlevoix and vicinity—I am still doing business at the old place, and it you are in need of any thing in the line of dry goods, groceries, boots and shoes, crockery or provisions. Call and see me. Byron See.

Great excitement! Young men in Charlevoix can't find the gate; but Dr. Crouter has just received a large stock of patent medicines, druggist sundries and chemicals.

Carpenter & Bartholomew have just received a nice assortment of day goods, boots and shoes, clothing &c. Call and see them.

Why send out for kerosine oil, when you can buy it so cheap at at Carpenter & Bartholomew's.

A HORRIBLE CRIME.

The Murder of Little Edith Freeman by Her Fanatical Father.

Freeman's family consisted of his wife—a tall, slender, blue-eyed woman of thirty, whom he married ten years ago—and his two daughters, Bessie, born in 1872, and Edith, two years later. It is admitted that he has been a kind husband and a loving father, and he has appeared almost to idolize little Edith; yet he tells his wife that a revelation calls upon him to sacrifice some member of his family. They pray together; they ask in their petition that so great a test of their faith may not be required of them. They seem to have talked it over as they would any matter of mutual concern. He even hinted something of it to his fellow-believers, and now says that he prayed that if any life were required his own might be that one; but as it is unquestionable that he intended to become an itinerant preacher, or, as he prefers to call it, a prophet, there is some doubt expressed as to the fervency of such a prayer, if it was made.

Freeman says that he knew that the further revelation would come that would indicate the member of his family whose death was required, and that he and his wife waited patiently to receive it. It came (to continue his story, wholly corroborated by his wife,) in the dead of night of Wednesday, or perhaps just after midnight on Thursday morning. Then he suddenly awakened, and the revelation that he received was that his baby-pet, Edith, a blue-eyed, fair, and brown-haired girl, must be offered up as a sacrifice. He at once awoke his wife, and told her of his commission. The maternal instinct for a time was the stronger. She had been able to talk vaguely about the loss of her children; but when she was brought face to face with it, she at first protested. Freeman says that she begged him not to do it. She pleaded—so he told Mr. Orr, who subsequently had a talk with him—with the tears streaming down her cheeks, for the life of her darling Edith. "But I talked with her," says Freeman. "I told her that we could not risk the displeasure of God; and when I persuaded her that Edith would either be restored to us after three days or else would be translated, then she assented. She saw it was a Divine command." Freeman also says that he knelt by the bedside and prayed, and that a great drop of sweat stood upon his forehead, that the test of his faith might not be required. Then, as he expressed it, his soul was filled with peace, and he prepared with his wife to make the sacrifice.

"I had hopes," he said to one gentleman on the cars on Friday, "when I went to the shed to get the knife that God would stay my hand, as He did Abraham's as he was about to offer up Isaac, but I determined if my hand was not stayed to make the sacrifice as gently as possible, so that my little one would pass away without suffering." Mrs. Freeman, who now recalls the event without the slightest appearance of suffering, lighted a lamp and placed it on a chair by the bedside where the two daughters were sleeping. Then she leaned over Edith, who was sleeping on the outside of the bed, and, lifting Bessie in her arms, took her away to her own chamber. Freeman then, turning down the bedclothes, and raising little Edith's arm, so that nothing might interfere with the blow, raised the knife. "I held it a minute or two," he said, "hoping that I should receive the call to stay my hand, but I did not." The blade penetrated the heart, passing between the fifth and sixth ribs. The little girl opened her eyes and fixed them on her father. He says she murmured "Papa!" and that he seized her and held her to his heart until she was dead. Dr. Smith, who was made an examination to-day of the wound, says that she could not have lived a minute. The hemorrhage was mostly internal. Then Freeman put her back upon the pillow, offered up another prayer, and, lying down beside her, went peacefully to sleep. His wife was already asleep in the adjoining chamber, with Bessie in her arms.

The discovery of the crime was accidental. A Miss Davis was receiving a call in the evening from the Village Constable, Mr. Reddy, and, upon his growing late to explain the cause of her very sorrowful mood, she told him briefly what had happened. He could not believe it, and neither could the Selectman to whom he at once went; but, happening to meet Farmer Howard, who Reddy knew was at a meeting at Freeman's, Reddy asked him about it, and Howard, without the least excitement, said that Freeman had obeyed the Divine command. The Deputy Sheriff was at once sent for, and arrested Freeman and his wife, and locked them up in the Jail at Harrisonville. Freeman said that he was perfectly ready to go to Jail, and his wife, who seemed almost to be under a mesmeric influence from her husband, cheerfully went with him and the Sheriff.—Boston Cor. N. Y. Sun.

Cancelling Postage Stamps.

Every now and then a paragraph goes the rounds to the effect that some scientific individual will give so many hundred dollars for a million cancelled postage stamps. Several persons have succeeded in collecting the million, and in some instances $50.0 or $800 were paid for their collection. Those who innocently aid in making these collections little think that in most cases they are helping to defraud the Government. Advanced as scientific knowledge is at the present day, there has as yet been discovered no preparation for cancelling postage stamps that will not wash off. It is estimated that the Government loses $1,000,000 every year by the use of washed stamps in the Postoffice alone. The loss through washed revenue stamps is also great. A million cancelled three-cent stamps when washed are worth $30,000. This being the case, it is easy seen that the man who invents an uncancellable ink will make his fortune. Hundreds of inks and devices have been tried, but it is curious to note that the most complete cancelling apparatus yet known is the one in a country Postmaster with his pen and ink. Some time ago a man traveled from St. Louis to Washington with a bottle of his ink, being unwilling to risk his secret by all-owing the stuff to go out of his hands and perhaps be analyzed. He reached the Department, and proudly cancelled a stamp in the presence of the authorities, who took it and quickly washed it clean with soapy water. His ingenuity in trying different "antidotes" for his ink had not led him to the use of the simplest means procurable. Hundreds of chemical combinations have been tried by the different inventors. Acids of all kinds have been combined with the inks in common use, and for all of them some other combination has been found that will remove all traces and leave the stamp clean as it was. Inks have been offered which eat away the paper it is put on, so strong are the acids, but while there is no doubt of their efficiency the objections to their use are obvious. The chemist of the Patent Office for a long time found chemical means of washing out everybody else's ink, and then presented an invention of his own which he could not wash out. It was given to a Smithsonian Institution chemist and he shortly found out how to wash it clean. After this the Department ceased to expect that an indelible ink would be found.—Detroit Free Press.

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

—The Quakers, or Friends, are said to have been diminishing slowly though steadily during the last twenty years, in consequence of the secularization of many of the younger people born in the society.

—Protestant Churches continue to make headway among the Mormons of Utah. The Presbytery of Utah now has ten ministers, in place of two less than four years ago, and eight churches. In its day schools there are 300 and in its Sundny-Schools 900 scholars.

—There are 356 Protestant Sunday-Schools in the city, with 88,257 scholars on their rolls. There are likewise of Roman Catholics, Jews and so forth, 62 Sunday-Schools, having 27,580 scholars on their rolls, making a total of 418 schools, with an enrollment of 115,826 scholars.—N. Y. Post.

—Bishop Fitzgerald (Roman Catholic), who has charge of the Diocese of Little Rock, Ark., has been appointed to succeed the late Bishop Rosecrans at Columbus, Ohio, but he is so attached to his people at Little Rock and they are so attached to him that he will ask the Pope to reconsider the appointment.

—The Evangelization Society of Spain, which began its work in 1855, has now seven central stations, with as many congregations; eight missionary agents, thirty-one minor missions and preaching places, six Bible day schools; also seven Sunday-Schools, and five night schools for adults. The annual cost of the work is less than $11,000.

—The cost of elementary instruction in Prussia amounts to $8,100,000 annually; the sum being covered by clerical and a half millions of marks from property and legacies, five and a third millions from State subventions, and the balance from communal grants. Gratuitous instruction is given in seven-tenths of the schools in Prussia in which count over 20,000 inhabitants.

—The Boston correspondent of the London Guardian, a Church-of-England organ, writes: "The number of unemployed clergy is becoming a public scandal. Many of them, with their families, are reduced to the greatest distress. They are forced to give up one place, and go almost hat in hand begging for some other—degraded in the sight of the community, in that of the Church, and, most of all, in their own eyes. Clergy in the East are writing to the West to try to find something to do there; clergy from the West are coming back to the East to postage-worried and worn-out and helpless Bishops for vacant parishes here. And clergy both at East and West are beginning to talk seriously of the necessity of giving up the ministry and returning to secular work for the support of their families."

—The programme for the World's Conference of the Evangelical Alliance at Basle, Switzerland, has been issued. The Conference will open Aug. 31 and close Sept. 7, and the proceedings will be in French, though English meetings, for British and American delegates, will be held. Sept. 1 there will be reports on the condition of Protestantism in the various countries represented. Dr. Schaff reporting for the United States. Evangelization will be the chief subject for the second day, Christian education for the third, Protestantism and society for the fourth, Missions for the fifth, and Christian union for the sixth. Among the names on the programme are those of Van Oosterzee, Schaff, Schneele, Cremer, Godet, Lelievre, Stoughton, Fliselnor, De Pressense, Christlieb, Arthur (London), Hurst and Stockmeyer.

THE Canadian lumbermen say the past winter has been one of the most favorable on record for getting out timber and saw-logs.

Begging as a Fine Art.

Mr. J. H. Gregg, of Hong Kong, has recently written to a London paper a very interesting letter on Chinese beggars. Certainly some of the accounts of these mendicants are horrible in the extreme, and would hardly be credited if the authority was not so good. He says that he has actually seen one beggar bearing on his back a leper so much affected by the disease that his ears and hands and feet were apparently sloughing off. With this loathsome burden, Mr. Gregg says, the beggar threatened to enter each shop he passed, unless the shopkeeper at once administered to his wants. Alms were promptly thrown into the street, and quickly picked up. Others, according to this account, go about carrying sharp Chinese razors, with which they cut themselves to show their misery, and to extort alms. Mr. Gregg has seen mendicants with the upper part of their bodies covered with blood. In the Consular Prison, in the Province of Canton, he saw a beggar literally bathed in his own blood, which also sprinkled over the floor of the shop in which he was praying in such an apparently obdurate heart of the shopkeeper. He also relates horrible stories of beggars who vary the above fashion by knocking their heads against the walls of shops, and of others who beat their bodies with large stones for the edification of passers-by. Not contented with these pleasant and entertaining exhibitions, some of the more emaciated have an agreeable habit of apparently appearing in a dying condition on the threshold of a shop or dwelling house, and announcing, in dramatic tones, their purpose of remaining there to die. Here is Mr. Gregg's account of one instance: "In May, 1874, I saw one, apparently perishing from hunger, throw himself down at the doorway of a dwelling house, saying that he would die of starvation if he were not immediately relieved. The householder, who was in a great state of trepidation, at once offered the starving man a small sum of money, which was indignantly refused. A friend who was with me expressed his readiness to relieve the wants of the sufferer. He held out a half-dollar, and the pensious householder at once rushed toward him, and eagerly grasped the coin, which he at once gave to the sufferer."

This letter goes to show that the mendicants of European countries and the United States have not begun to master the art of begging, and that they are as yet but in their infancy when compared with the almond-eyed children of the Flowery Land. It would not be a bad idea for some of our beggars and tramps to try knocking their heads against the walls of stores, and cutting themselves into mince-meat with sharp razors. It would take a good deal of that sort of work to melt some people, and it might increase the mentality of tramps.—Chicago Inter-Ocean.

A Nihilist Proclamation to the Czar.

The Vienna Tagblatt publishes the following proclamation, addressed to the Czar of Russia by the Revolutionary Committee just before the recent attack on his life:

"To His Accursed Majesty:

"The warning and threatening letters, as well as the sentences which we, the invisible delegates of the murderously oppressed Russian people, have sent to the various dignitaries of the present despotic government in Russia, belong, as a rule, to the preparative work, and for that reason neither yourself nor any member of your family appears in the slightest degree menaced by our executive organs. In the first instance, we wish to clean out in its lowest and filthiest corners the Augean stables of despotism; to free the people from administrative persecution which throws them guiltless into prison, and there, without compassion, chastises them and allows them to suffer from hunger and thirst, and then sends them as insurgents to the gallows, or sends them to the polar regions to work in the mines. We sit in judgment, and shall be compassionless in the exercise of our office, and shall recoil from the use of no means which may lead us to our object, which is the eradication of the hellish tendency of despotism through fire and sword. The victims say not to their executioners, "mortiurs te salutant," and if you, Alexander Nicolaievitch, refuse to hear our warning voice, to put an end to this tyranny, we hereby declare to you that tyranny will be beaten in the end. Your system in Russia is rotten to the core. Our almost boundless resources are ruined. Your army of functionaries is a gang of cruel and unsatiable thieves. Your Judges are a shame to justice. Your Coroners, Police Masters and Generals are so many satraps worthy of Xerxes or Darius. Wherever we turn our eyes we see naught but stupidity, mingled with cruelty, wanton waste combined with the most scrupulous spoliation of the people. For the army alone you reserve your fatherly care. You are getting into dangerously deep water, Alexander Nicolaievitch. Therefore we warn you, but spare your life.

THE EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

The Ten-Dollar Certificates.

As some of the persons who think of investing in the United States refunding certificates are anxious for information as to everything relating to them, and especially as to the method of converting them into 4-per-centum bonds, a reporter of the Evening Post to-day made inquiries of officers of the Government who were likely to be best informed on the subject. In reply, the following statements were made: The ten-dollar certificates, bearing 4 per centum interest from the 1st of April, 1879, and purchasable at the designated United States depositories, in sums not exceeding $100, for their face value and accrued interest, will be convertible into United States 4-per-centum bonds, in sums of fifty dollars, at any time after the 1st of next July. The words "any time" in the act authorizing their conversion are construed to mean any time before 1907, when the 4-per-centum bonds will be redeemable. The certificates themselves are not redeemable at all, but are transferable without endorsement like United States or National Bank notes. The interest upon them cannot be collected in money, the act authorizing their issue providing that they shall be convertible, "with accrued interest," into the 4-per-centum bonds. "Suppose," said one of the Government officers questioned, "that a year from the date of issue I wish to convert one hundred dollars of the certificates into bonds. The interest upon them will be four dollars, but the Treasury cannot give me a bond for one hundred and four dollars, as there are none of that denomination. Probably, therefore, I should be given a bond for one hundred dollars and a certificate for four dollars. There would be a great many other persons who would receive small certificates in the same way, and I should either sell my certificate to one of them, or would buy enough from them to get fifty dollars' worth, which would be convertible into a bond for that amount."

"I don't know," he continued, "exactly how the details of the conversion will be regulated, but the Secretary of the Treasury will probably issue a circular before the 1st of July giving full information on the subject. It is very likely that the certificates will be made convertible at the different Sub-Treasuries as well as at Washington. No agent or broker will be necessary in the matter. If a person having fifty dollars' worth of the certificates sends them by mail to the United States Treasurer at Washington, after the 1st of July, with a request for their conversion, I have no doubt that the required bond and a certificate for the accrued interest will be forwarded to the owner by mail or express, as may be requested."—N. Y. Evening Post.

Betting on a Sure Thing.

A tough-looking citizen walked into one of the Justice's Courts yesterday afternoon very much intoxicated, and requested that he be allowed to sweep off drinking for a year. His Honor obligingly put him through the solemn ceremonies, and the convert, with a confused remembrance of well-meaning but finely expressed resolutions, stumbled out of the court-room.

"But he don't keep it an hour," said one of the grinning lawyers.

"Bet he sticks to it a week, anyhow," observed the Court with confidence.

"Nonsense!" cried everybody.

"What'll you bet?" asked the Judge.

"Twenty to ten," exclaimed an eager attorney, producing the money.

"Done!" cried His Honor, and the stakes were turned over to a Chronicle reporter.

"Constable," said the Court quietly, "go out and fetch that man back."

In a few minutes the reformed one was dragged in, and the Judge ascended his dais, rapped for order, and looked severe.

"Charged with being drunk," said the Court. "What's your plea?"

"Guess I'm full," admitted the prisoner, with an idiotic smile.

"Ten days in the County Jail. Constable, lock up your prisoner. Mr. Reporter, hand this Court that wealth. Court's adjourned.—Virginia (Nev.) Chronicle.

The Zulu Weapon.

There are two principal kinds of assagais, the throwing and the stabbing, the latter with a long and straight blade. To a Kaffir this weapon is literally the staff of life. With it he kills his enemy and his game, slaughters and cuts up his cattle, trains their horns, shaves his own or his neighbor's head, does his carpentry and furriery, and countless other jobs of various sorts. In its original form, the assagai was essentially a missile, but the renowned Clarke, among other military reforms, converted it into a shorter and heavier stabbing spear, unfit for throwing, and only to be used at close quarters. To the shaft, with an average length of nearly five feet, and a diameter equal to a man's little finger, is cut from the assagai tree (Curtisia faginea), which is not unlike mahogany. The wood is brittle, yet elastic, the latter quality giving the spear that peculiar vibratory motion on which its accuracy of flight so much depends. On account of the brittleness, a novice will break many shafts before he learns the knack. The

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, May 15, 1879.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

The most noteworthy of recent developments in spiritualistic matters is now agitating this city. Mr. Henry Kiddle, at present and for a number of years past Superintendent of Public Schools in New York, an educated and able man, and a highly respected citizen has published a book on "Spiritual Communications," mainly filled with alleged messages from the spirit world, halted through the mediumship of Mr Kiddle's own children. Among the number of the illustrious departed who, according to the work mentioned, have taken means of communicating with a world which they have forever annihilated, and Moses, Pius IX., Archbishop Hughes, Sir Isaac Newton, Byron, Shelley, Edgar A. Poe, A. T. Stewart, the first Napoleon, George Washington, and a small host of other celebrities, ancient and modern. The language used by all the contributors to this extraordinary eye psalm is suspiciously similar in style and oracular silliness, and is the coarsest rubbish from begining to end. The book would have attracted no attention without the endorsement of so prominent a man; but as it is the papers have devoted columns to the publication of extracts and reviews. The episode is uniformly regretted as indicating so complete a hallucination of Mr. Kiddle that it will probably end in his resignation from a post which he has filled with great ability and acceptance.

In addition to this serious outbreak we have another and different subject of wonderment and conversation in the shape of the most brilliant jail-breaking exploit known to recent history. One Leary, more familiarly known by the sanguinary soubriquet of "Red" Leary, has been for some time an inmate of Ludlow street jail, which will be remembered was the last residence of Wm. M. Tweed, the reason being his alleged complicity in the great Northampton bank robbery of a few years ago. On Wednesday night a messenger from the jail rushed breathless into the Central Police Office, and startled its occupants by announcing the escape of the notorious prisoner. Since that time the "finest police in the world" have been rushing wildly about, trying to recover the lost sheep, but up to this writing they have only "great expectation" of success.

After the discovery of the escape, investigation of its methods were at once undertaken and the mystery was quickly solved. In a closet at the end of one of the prison corridors was found a jagged opening in the solid wall of the building, which being followed up, was seen to lead to a fireplace in a room on the fifth floor of an adjoining tenement house, and and then the secret was out. It seems that Leary's friends had hired the room in the tenement house and slowly and by dint of enormous labor succeeded in piercing their way through four and one half feet of solid brick work to the closet before referred to. The work must have occupied many days and nights, and had of course to be conducted with the greatest silence and caution. Leary was daily visited by his wife, and was thus kept appriscd of the progress of his deliverers. He knew just when to expect the completion of their task, and at the appointed hour sauntered down the corridor, as he was free to do, and into the closet. All but one layer of bricks having been removed, a preconcerted signal was given, and Leary putting his powerful shoulder to the thin sheet of wall, shoved it inward, making a jagged opening about fifteen by twenty five in size. Through this opening the confederates dropped a stout rope, and the burglar was speedily dragged from durance vile into freedom

Leary, whose sinister sounding nickname was bestowed on account of the fiery hue of his hair and beard, is a tall, hearty man, weighing 260 pounds and it seemed almost incredible that he should have been able to get through so small a hole; but when a man has the penitentiary on one side of him and liberty on the other, he will usually stand a little crowding to reach the latter. It is stated that the probabilities are good for his early recapture.

Our third sensation this week, or rather end of a sensation, is the acquittal of Mr. Talmage by the Brooklyn Presbytery after seven weeks of a bitter and rather undignified trial. Brother Talmage's vindication can hardly be called triumphant, 25 of the members voting for his acquittal, and 30 voting for a more or less complete conviction. After the announcement of the final verdict, Mr. Talmage stood up and delivered one of his most startling and characteristic speeches, thanking his friends in the most extravagant terms that made them fairly wriggle with wrath. Of those latter gentlemen, Mr. T said, "I feel as though I would like to meet them all in heaven, although I am not anxious to meet them the first two or three days! It is only through the help of God that I have not lost my temper" His tirade finished, Mr. Talmage left the room and thus escaped the storm which his invective aroused among his baffled and indignant accusers. Finally, the "Court of Jesus Christ" as they call themselves, adjourned in a frame of mind which, to say the least, would have eminently befitted a court of Beelzebub.

A strange case has just been disposed of by the Grand Jury, which has excited much attention and comment on account of its mysterious character and the high standing of one of the parties involved. Some two weeks ago a young colored boy applied at the office of one of the sailing boats for change, laying down a bill he alleges, a five-dollar bill. The clerk, who is a nephew of Collector Merritt of this port, returned change for one dollar. The boy raised a disturbance, and was put out. He caused the arrest of the clerk, and a large amount of strangely contradictory testimony was taken. The whole matter was referred to the Grand Jury, which declined to indict Merritt. The affair has created much unpleasant feeling. RADIX.

When the country comes to elect a President next year, it will look to this hour and be warned against putting a Democrat in the White House.—Albany Journal.

The rush of rebels for office at Washington is so great that existing accommodations are insufficient, and a new bridge is to be built across the Potomac at the capital.

The Indianapolis Journal says that the Democrats at Washington are so securely corraled that they don't know whether to back out, break out or jump out.

An Eastern paper says that Stanley Matthews, who has just been in Washington, is currently talked of in banking circles in New York as John Sherman's successor in the treasury department.

New York is already in line for a rousing Republican victory in November. The Tribune, with its left hand spread above its beating heart, and its right pointing to the starry flag, proclaims it.

Brave Old Zach Makes Another Speech:

Special Dispatch to The Post and Tribune.

Washington, May 8.—Senator Chandler made another speech to day, his second during his present Senatorial term, and the Democratic caucus will have to take measures for expelling him from the Senate if he makes many more, as they have been very destructive to Democratic interests He never prepares a speech, and nobody, not even himself, knows when he is going to make one, until something is done or said to arouse him when he gets up and fires away. He said to night that he had been brooding over the events of the last 15 years since the war for several weeks, in fact, ever since he heard Jeff Davis called a patriot during the closing nights of the last session, and he had been gradually getting very mad to-day, this afternoon, when Mr. Blaine said something to recall to his mind the reminiscences of those years, he rose with an impulse and gave the Senate the benefit of the lesson his glance at the past had taught him. The speech was as sudden, as short and as destructive as the explosion of a Columbiad. Senator Chandler's manner of speaking as is well known in Michigan, is not graceful, but makes up in force what it lacks in polish He talks as if he meant what he says. His long arms did not move to-day according to the rules of art, but his gestures were eloquent. His voice rose and fell in a way to give vigor to his utterances, and his lips quivered with emotion as he passed between his sentences. There was no studied posturing, no embroidered phrases, but sound sense and undisputed facts, uttered in plain blunt English Senator Eaton, the Mr. Pumblechook of the Senate, called him to order for saying that 12 Senators from the south, had got their seats by violence, intimidation and murder, because it was a disagreeable thing to hear. But there was no men on the Democratic side who dared stand up and dispute the fact. Eaton was the only man who interrupted him, but the whole Democratic side squirmed in their seats as he lashed them. Eaton was so mad he could not sit still. No reply was made because reply was impossible. Several Democrats intended to speak and Ben Hill had been preparing for a week. When Mr Chandler finished, the Democrats looked at each other as much as to say, "What had we better do about it?" If one had attempted to reply, there would have been such a scene as has not been witnessed in Congress since the war, because the Democrats were so enraged that none of them could have spoken temperately, and the southern men were in a dangerous mood. Senator Eaton, who had charge of the bill, did not play with danger, but, as soon as he could collect his own scattered nerves, called for a vote on the bill, and, in the confusion that followed the speech, the roll call commenced. It is a rule of the Senate that there can be no debate after the roll call has begun, and the bill passed by a vote of 33 to 29, the Senate being divided on strictly party lines. The Senate adjourned at once. The speech is the topic of the town to night, and creates even more sensation than Chandler's Jeff Davis speech.

How Dresses are Trimmed.

There are many new and pretty skirt trimmings, many of which may be easily made at house. Newest of these is the shirred plaiting. For this a straight piece of flounce is cut twelve inches deep and three times the length of the skirt's breadth. It is laid in inch-wide kilt plaits, and each plait is stitched (like a tuck, indeed, more than a plait) to within a finger's length at the bottom, when they are pressed flatly. Then, about three inches above this are shirred on the edge by a single row of fine hand gathering, and this draws the flounce up into a succession of scantily puffed plaits. The flounce is then stitched on an inch from the top, and again at the head of the plain plaiting at the bottom. Shirred plaitings are also made in clusters, three in a cluster, and a space between. Another fancy is to finish the fan plaiting. This is cut straight also in the deep depth required and then plaited in clusters of five plaits, plied one on another. The plaits are pressed and stitched across near the top, and again a few inches from the bottom, so that the lower part spreads out in a succession of open fans. Very much liked but scarcely new, is the Vandyked flounce with only fullness enough to allow it to set smoothly around the skirt over a fan plaiting, the fans of which comein the open spaces between the Vandykes. Another popular heading for flounces is a shell trimming formed of a strip of the dress material piped on both edges and box-plaited into triple plaits. Between the box-plaits the edges of the band are caught together to form the shells. Scarf draperies are much worn both on short and long dresses. For walking dresses they are still folded in upturned plaits across the front and knotted behind. Some tunics are slit straight up through the middle of the front breadth for from six inches to half a yard. The sides of the opening are then faced and turned back in revers. A bow is placed at the apex of the triangular opening thus formed and the plaiting in front extends high enough to cover all that part of the lower skirt disclosed by the opening.

Perpendicular trimmings are very fashionable. Long revers, extending from the bust to the edge of the overskirt, or where the dress is in one to the trimming at the foot, appear on many suits. A great deal of fine shirring is used, especially on thin dresses. Shirred plastrons of silk for cloth are favorite trimmings for black grenadines. The shirring is usually done in clusters—inch wide bands of horizontal shirring twelve inches apart, from the top to the bottom, drawing the plastron into long, flat pulls. A great deal of Pekin is used. All material in alternate raised and flat stripes is known as Pekin, whether it be velvet, satin, silk, wool, or cotton; or, as is often the case, a mixed fabric. This forms bands, revers, yokes, vests, etc., upon solid-colored materials. Usually the Pekin matches the dress in tint—violent contrasts being too fatal for favor. The fancy just now is to use it in crescent-like pieces from three to eight inches deep—a fashion which affords an easy method of lengthening any bodice left over and unfashionably short. A stylish suit noticed recently had two folds, one of plain satin, the other of satin Pekin edging the bottom of the skirt as the back side-seams; then they were let loose and extended to form a knot with long ends and loops in front. Above this the back of the basque was thinished with loops of satin, forming a double fringe. Festioned flounces are much used on the front and sides of trained skirts. They form from three to five curves, are cut on the bias and edged top and bottom with lace, knife-plaiting, or a fold of silk or satin. Brocade is much used for trimming fashionable silks, and is put on in the same way as the Pekin.—Philadelphia Times.

He Wouldn't Have It.

Some men can't appreciate true friendship, and they seem to delight in holding at arm's length those who wish to think kindly of them. Such a one lives on Jefferson avenue, Detroit. A number of his acquaintances were the other day canvassing his many good qualities, and it was decided to make him a present and deliver a speech. A shake purse of forty cents was made up, the cash invested in a large bottle of the real stuff, eight friends proceeded in a body to the "consignee's" office. He was in. One of the gentlemen held up the sponge and began:

"When men desire to show their friendship for a fellow-man they present him with something useful or ornamental or something typical or emblematical of his daily life. Now, we——"

The speech ended right there. The sponge was left behind, but the crowd took a cool scuttle, four or five clubs and two empty boxes down-stairs with them, and they were over the sidewalk in quick time. Now, we——

Ghost Stories Unveiled.

What are termed "supernatural occurrences" are, in nearly all cases, capable of being solved by the exercise of a little common sense. We are indebted to the contributors for the following examples, all of which are guaranteed to be strictly true, and may be enjoyed by even the most timid reader:

The locality where the following occurrence took place is near a small village south of Dublin, on the road from the City of Armagh. On negray December night, now almost sixteen years ago, a middle-aged bachelor was returning from a Christmas party at which he had been invited by some of his village friends. Our hero, whose name was Charlie Coburn, occupied the position of land-steward to a country gentleman resident near the village. Charlie lodged at my father's, and found himself on his way home about the hour of twelve—not an unreasonable hour for a bachelor, certainly; but then Charlie was a model to his race, and his word was law to the parish. From his way home to our house, he required to pass through the village; and as there was a strapping, full-blooded party upon whom rumor attirmed Charlie "had his eye," we can suppose his temptation to have been complied with meditating on the fair Mary whose company he had just quitted, as he passed the cottages with three lights in each waisteoat pocket—his favorite attitude when in a musing mood.

It was only a week or two before that the introduction of gas-lamps in the village streets took place; and when our hero reached the end of the street, he was enabled, by the light of the last lamp, to perceive some person only a short distance in front of him, and proceeding in the same direction as himself. As the road to my father's was rather dreary and deserted, Charlie felt glad of the unexpected company he was about to come up with. Consequently, he withdrew his fingers from his waistcoat pockets, and striking the a swinging pace, so as to overtake the traveler as soon as possible. The latter gentleman, however, evinced not the slightest desire for Charlie's society. On the contrary, he kept moving ahead faster and faster, in proportion as his pursuer's pace increased. The two were during this time keeping their way along the footpath which ran outside a high wall, inclosing the demesne of a nobleman who resided in the neighborhood. In this wall, and just about a furlong or so past the last of the gas-lamps, was a narrow round which the lamp could not throw its rays, and it happened that at this very spot a gate leading into a graveyard was placed. Here the unsociable traveler suddenly and unaccountably disappeared from view.

It was impossible he could have jumped the wall, on account of its height; neither could he have crossed the road nor gone onward, as in either case Coburn must have seen him. Then where had he gone? Not having passed the gate, he must have gone through it. But on examining the gate it was found to be locked; and as the bars were too close to admit the passage of any human body, the only reasonable conclusion that Coburn could arrive at was that he had been pursuing a ghost! Having settled this point satisfactorily (though suddenly) in his own mind, he thought it might be as well if he gave the ghost a chance of pursuing him. Coburn was neither superstitious nor cowardly; but this being the first time he had ever seen a real ghost, he felt rather unnerved. Not knowing what terrible consequences his temerity might bring upon him, and believing discretion in this instance to be the better part of valor, he divested himself of his coat as quickly as possible, and throwing it over his shoulder, fled homeward, determined that if the ghost did give chase it should not catch him without having at least a run for its victim.

We had not gone to bed on Coburn's arrival. He came—or rather rushed—in, pale as a corpse, the perspiration pouring down his cheeks. His strange and unusual appearance seemed to put us all in such a state that none appeared to know the proper questions to put under the circumstances. However, Charlie, who, on entering, had thrown himself into a chair and his coat upon the floor, was the first to break the silence by grasping for "a drink of spring water." He gulped it down, and my father, who had run to the door on hearing Charlie's voice, found that there were no highwaymen lurking in the vicinity, came in and grasped Coburn by the wrist—to feel his pulse, I suppose—asked what had happened.

"Oh! pants Coburn, with horror depicted in every feature, "—I've seen a ghost!"

I shivered. But my father, who was not a believer in ghosts, laughed outright. This seemed to nettle our lodger considerably, as he always prided himself on his veracity, and could not bear to have it impugned, especially on so serious a subject. After he had calmed down a little, my father endeavored to reason him out of his belief. But it was useless. "He had seen a ghost, though he never believed in them before, and there was an end of it."

"Well," said my father, "I have never seen a ghost; but I should much like to have it to say that I had seen one; and if you think there is any chance of your ghost favoring us with a second appearance, I propose that we both set off to the graveyard at once."

Coburn seemed very reluctant to make the experiment; but as my father began to throw some light aspersions on his courage, he at last consented and they both set off. They examined the gate and found it locked; peered through the bars, but saw no signs of a ghost. Then a policeman might have gone a second time for a friend onward the village, they proceeded a short distance in that direction; but imagine their feelings when, on looking back, they saw behind them not one ghost, but two! Both ghosts went through the gate, but proved to be nothing earlier than the shadows of the two men, thrown by the newly-erected gas-lamps, the bend in the wall causing the figures to appear as if they had vanished into the graveyard.

One evening some weeks ago I was in my father's house preparing for bed, when I suddenly heard what sounded like four steps coming along the passage leading to my room; then some one appeared to be feeling in the dark for the handle of the door, which was slightly shaken, and a low knock was heard. Of course I knew concluded that some one of the family was outside; and my first being locked, I called out who was there, but received no answer. Thinking this was very odd, I went to the door and opened it; but, to my amazement, no one was outside, and yet I could hear no footsteps retreating. I must explain that my room is at the end of a long passage, to which you descend by five steps, my door forming the end of the passage and my room being at the end of one wing of the house); therefore, on opening my door, I should have commanded the whole of the corridor, and it seemed impossible for any one to have escaped in a hurry; and I knew that the two rooms on the same passage were locked up so that no one could have got out of sight in that way.

Very much puzzled, I closed and locked my door; and after a brief interval the same thing was repeated. Cautiously approaching my door and approaching then, as if some one were feeling for the handle of the door in the dark, and shaking the door slightly by so doing; and then again a low knock. A second time did I open my door, but with the same result. No one was there. I frankly confess that now I began to feel somewhat uncomfortable, on account of ghosts, but visions of thieves which had loaded scenes in my mind (very irrationally, of course), and I felt persuaded that some one must be moving about the house; and yet I knew that every one else had gone to bed long ago, and I own I did not feel inclined to risk an encounter with this mysterious visitor while trying to arouse some one else, my rough ideas of ghosts having gone from the rest of the family.

Determined, however, if possible to find out what it was, I crouched down with my ear to the door, listening for a repetition of the noise, which was ringing to my closeness to the door, I discovered the disturber of my peace in a mouse! It appeared this mouse, which had very evidently lost its way, had got down into the passage, and, finding retreat rather difficult (owing, I suppose, to the steps), was rushing up and down the passage at full speed, thereby producing the sound of footsteps on the carpet, and on finding its egress barred by my door, trying to escape by running up the door; but the varnished paint affording it no foothold, the imitation of its run only sufficed to carry it up a short way (thus shaking the door and slightly moving the handle), and it then fell down with a flop, thus producing the knock.

I could not resist a hearty laugh when I found out the real cause of the disturbance; but yet it shows that stories of strange nocturnal noises should be received with great caution, for certainly I should always have declared that some one had been trying my door that night, had I not found out the real cause.

The following are related in the conversational style in which they were told to our contributor:

"I am sure none of you were ever so terrified by a ghost as I was," said my Aunt Mabel. "It was an American ghost, which perhaps accounts for its having been more wild and weird and altogether electrifying than anything ever met with in the old country. You know that I went to America when I was young, and that I spent many of my early years in a lonely farmhouse in the backwoods."

"And without servants, Aunt Mabel?"

"Quite true, dear. Servants would not stay with such an out-of-the-way place without higher wages than we could give them, and, indeed, the 'helps' we had were more a hinderance. But we were all young and strong, and we never had happier days than when we all kept house together, and did the work with our own hands. Capital training it was, though at first of course we made many mistakes, everything was so strange and new to us.

"It was soon after our arrival at this lonely place that I met with a terrible fright. My sister Isabel and I shared the same room, and one night I was awakened by hearing her crying by my side.

"'What is the matter, Isabel?'

"'Oh, a toothache, a most dreadful toothache; and I have nothing to relieve it. If I could only get some brandy; a little burnt brandy would cure it in a moment.'

"'My dear,' I said, jumping out of bed, 'I will get you some directly. I know where it is—in the parlor cupboard, and I have got the key.'

"But you have no light.'

"'Oh, I can grope my way to the room, and then I can easily light my candle at the grate.'

"No sooner said than done. I wrapped a shawl around me, went swiftly and quietly down stairs, felt my way through the dark and deserted room, and succeeded in lighting my candle at the stove. But no sooner did I hold up the lighted candle to make my way to the cupboard, than the most unearthly shriek ran through the room. At the same moment the light was suddenly extinguished. I was left in total darkness, and all was still and silent as before. Chilled with horror, and trembling in every limb, I groped my way back as well as I could, and told my story to Isabel; but she was in such pain that it did not make the impression on her that I expected. I got but little sympathy.

"It must have been the wind, or a wild-cat outside that screamed,' she said; 'and as to the light being put out, that, of course, was sheer accident. Of course you have heard the noises of the ghosts.'

"This rather put me on my mettle, and, moved beside by her moans of pain, I at last braced myself up to a second attempt. I went with great determination, resolved that nothing should now hinder me from bringing the remedy to my sister. Proceeding down-stairs again, all went well till I turned from the stove with the lighted candle in my hand. Instantly the same yell resounded in my ears, while something, I could not tell what, swept past me, and dashed out the light! How I reached my room I never knew, but I crawled into bed more dead than alive; and, as soon as I could speak, I told Isabel that, no matter what happened, nothing would induce me to make the venture again.

"Morning came at last, and with it the solution of the mystery. My brothers had come home late, bringing with them a screech-owl which they had put under the parlor for safety till the morning. The light had, of course, disturbed it, and it had flown against the candle and extinguished it while in the act of uttering its most singularly hideous cry. My terror at the midnight ghost was a joke at my expense long after."

"I think you were very brave to go into the room a second time, Aunt Mabel."

"Well, I think I was, I must admit. But I would have braved almost anything for Isabel, and I was a strong, courageous girl, who hardly knew what fear was. Still, I can assure you that even to this day, when I recall the scene, I seem still to feel the thrill of terror that shook me at the sound of that queerly shrill shriek. Heard for the first time in the dead of night, and now close to my ear, it was a truly startling and dreadful. It was a great relief when the mystery was so simply explained. But only imagine if it had been explained! If the owl had got in unperceived, and had escaped by the chimney or an open window! how dreary! But see! at the touch of the little wand of truth the ghost vanishes, and only a poor screech-owl remains!"

"Now let me tell the story of our 'family ghost,'" said Miss B——. "Such a useful, faithful, devoted spirit it was! An Irish ghost; but not a banshee, more like a 'delicate Ariel' or household fairy. I only fear its race is extinct now, as well as that of the invaluable servants who used to identify themselves with their master's family. Our ghost was before my time; but often have I heard my grandmother talk about it, and what a mystery it was.

"The household was large and varied, consisting of the old couple, some grown-up ones, one of them married, an orphan niece, and two or three young children in the nursery. There were no railways in those days, and when any of the family intended going to the county town, they had to be up at dawn of day, take a solitary breakfast and set out on what was then a formidable expedition. Of course the affair used to be discussed in the family the evening before, commissions given and the time of starting fixed on. And now comes the strange part of my story. Whether the servants were up in good time or not, the fire was always lighted, the kettle boiling, and breakfast ready at the appointed time! The clothes which came from the wash were carefully sorted out and appropriated to their respective owners, none could tell by whom. If a fire was required in the nursery, it was kept up by invisible hands. Nurse was a heavy sleeper, but no matter; her delicacies were supplied by the obliging and indefatigable ghost. Nurse used to find us bright a fire in the morning as she had left at night, the turf-basket replenished, and all as neat and orderly as hands could make it. To get out the breakfast things my grandmother's keys must have been taken from her room, but by whom no one could tell.

"'Leave the key-basket in my room,' said a visitor the night before he left. 'I am a light sleeper, and if the ghost comes to get my breakfast, I shall know it!'

"Toward daybreak he heard the keys tinkle, and instantly threw a dagger, which he had hidden under his pillow, to the spot where the sound proceeded. In the morning the dagger was found stuck into the door, but no clue to the mysterious visitor could be found.

"At last my grandmother determined that the mystery should be solved, whatever it might be, and she prepared to sit up in her room all night, listening for the faintest sound. For a long time all was still; and my grandmother was beginning to fear that her long watch through the winter's night was only wasting her strength in vain, when at last, somewhere in the small hours, she heard a slight thud upon the stairs. Instantly seizing her candle, she rushed out, just in time to see a slender figure in white, carrying a basket of coals in his arm. The fall of a sod from the fuel-basket was the sound she had heard. My grandmother was a brave woman, and swiftly as the white figure flitted away, swiftly did she follow after, up stairs and along passages, till just as it reached the nursery door, she overtook it, and discovered her niece walking in her sleep!

"It seems the poor girl was so anxious about the household arrangements that she used to rise in her sleep to accomplish all that she knew ought to be done. How long she might have kept her life through the foolish rashness of a young visitor, I have already told you. She was never again permitted to sleep alone. My grandmother took her to her own bed; and clasped in her loving arms, the poor girl learned to forget her fears, and take a full benefit of Consent to Grow Old.

Age cannot be repelled, and should not be concealed, denied or disguised. It cannot, in these middle years of life, apprehend its peculiar peace and joy. Spring blossoms with flowers, and summer blooms with ripening fruits, but neither possesses the joy and pride of harvest. So, early life gives little token of happiness of age, yet reason assures us it must have a happiness of its own in store for those who are in it in harmony with its conditions. Remember! when we were children the labors, the studies, even the pleasures of grown men and women were repellent, or incomprehensible; we could not feel the robust, vigorous happiness with which adult life assumes its responsibilities, performs its labors and bears its burdens. But when, in due growth, we came to these, we took the same joy in them which puzzled as children so much in the lives of our fathers and mothers. So we can demonstrate (as surely as an astronomer computes an eclipse) that age is not less happy than youth, if it is met and borne aright. And observation confirms what reason alleges; for who does not know some among the old appearing happier than the young? But age must be met somewhat cheerfully. To shrink from it, to contrive evasions and disguises of its approach, to conceal it to ourselves and deny it to others, is no way to enter happily within its restful shade. It must come. It is coming. Away, then, with the devices and disguises, the fictions and pretenses, which falsify advancing years. Let the white hairs bloom, accept the glasses or the cane, yield up willingly whatever of faculty or power age withdraws, and look for the compensation which it brings, for some such assuredly there are. Consent to grow old.—Christian Union.

SENATOR CHANDLER.

What the Newspapers Say of His Speech.

From the Cincinnati Gazette.

The Confederates will find out in time that Zach Chandler is not a safe man to deal with. He never spanks unless the provocation is strong. Then he calls things by their right names. In his remarks in reply to Ben. Hill saturday, bounding in on past and present, he spoke the mind of the loyal North as well. The prejudice in this section in favor of the Government of the United States is rather increasing of late.

From the N. Y. Tribune.

Senator Chandler has enriched the Republican vocabulary with a phrase which will not be forgotten very soon. He says that when the North put upon the South the robe of citizenship and killed the fatted calf, and invited the prodigal sons to the feast, the south came in reard with the calm remark: "We have always owned that calf, and we are not grateful for the feast."

Mr. Chandler is mistaken in one thing when he says that on the brow of Dem ocrats is written the warning phrase, "Blame, mine, Nickel, Imperial." The average Democratic brow is not of a size to accommodate the whole of that inscription.

From the New York Times.

After Senator Blaine had finished his speech and received applause from the galleries, the President protem. who was just on the point of casting for a vote on the fall, when, much to the surprise of every one in the Senate Chamber, Zachariah Chandler, pale tremendous and very much excited, rose to make a speech. At once there was utmost silence in the chamber. The Democrats hurried in from the cloak-rooms, evidently expecting what was to come, and in a few moments the galleries were well filled by fillers about the capitol who are always on the lackout for an interesting speech and ever on hand expecting a sensation. Upon this occasion, at least, they were not disappointed. Senator Chandler made a most remarkable speech, and, evidently without much previously conceived intention, succeeded in creating more excitement than has been witnessed in the Senate during the present session.

From the Cincinnati Commercial.

When Zack. Chandler loads his gun for bear he puts in a four finger charge, and fetches his game with a report that is execrations from Maine to California.

There was another whine in the Senate yesterday about Zack Chandler's bloodletting letter, and Zach. explained He expressed the letter very much, and to feel very unpleasantly about treason and things.

Shaking to sow music with a drill core-knife would have been genuine comfort to the northern Democratic Senators in comparison with Senator Chandler's process of operating upon them.

"You have undertaken a very large job for piety of your size, "was one of the ugliest and hardest slugs fired into the brigadiers by old Zach. Chandlers.

From the Chicago Journal.

Z ch. Chandler's Jeff Davis speech enraged the Democrats, and it is announced that they are indignant because he told them yesterday that a dozen of their Senators were elected by fraud and violence. The truth is sometimes exceedingly unpleasant to hear.

From the Chicago Tribune.

During the exciting debate that followed, some of Hill's allusions to the events that preceded the Rebellion seemed to refresh the memory of Senator Chandler, of Michigan, who departed from his customary reticence and indulged in some reminiscences of 1861, and the complicity of the Democratic party with the aiders and abettors of treason that made a refreshing episode in the chronic dullness of the Congressional debate. He told more truth in 20 minutes than his Confederate opponent did in four hours; but it cannot be ensured that it was palatable to the southern Brigadiers and their daughters.

The Conflagration Beat August known as the Fire Fiend—insinuated himself into the great building occupied by the Post & Tribune, in Detroit, on Sunday evening, at a time when the most available portion of the fire department was at work on a fire at Delray, but returned a very threatening looking, but by a skillful and desperate conflict on the part of such of the fire department as could be summoned, the destroying monster was after many hours met, cut, leaving the beautiful and imposing mass a scene of thoroughly charcoaled sensational desolation.

On the 15th of August came upon us nearly best rousing a repetition of the fire of 1871 by which the greater portion of the city was destroyed. While the southeast wind was blowing flames were discovered in the dry house of a large lumber manufacturing establishment, and in a few minutes the entire premises were ablaze. Situated in what is known as the "Lumber District," the fire found plenty of food, and for a time it looked as though its progress would not be checked until a considerable territory had been burned over. By ordinary out the entire fire department—something that has not been done since 1871. Marshal Benner was called to duty, as in story over the flames.

PRESIDENTIAL VETO MESSAGE.

The Bill to Prohibit the Presence of the Military at Places of Election Disapproved of by the President. His Reasons Therefor.

WASHINGTON, May 12.

The following is the message of the President of the United States, returning to the House of Representatives the bill entitled "An Act to Prohibit Military Interference at Elections":

To the House of Representatives:

After a careful consideration of the bill entitled "An Act to Prohibit the Military Interference at Elections," I return it herewith to the House of Representatives, in which it originated, with the following objections to its approval:

In a communication sent to the House of Representatives on the 26th of last month, relating to the House resolution of inquiry of the 17th of that month, relating to appropriations for the Army, I stated that the Act of the 15th of June, 1878, [Posse Comitatus Act] was passed in the form it was in consequence of the belief on the part of many members of Congress that the provision in relation to the use of the Army at elections was unconstitutional, and that the Army could not be used for the purpose of preventing violence at the polls, and that the purpose of the provision was to prevent the use of the Army at elections for the purpose of keeping the peace and preventing violence, and that the provision was not intended to prevent the use of the Army for the purpose of enforcing the laws and protecting the officers charged with the duty of executing them. I also stated that at the time of the passage of the Act I was of the opinion that the provision in relation to the use of the Army at elections was unconstitutional, and that the Army could be used

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, May 21, 1879

EDITOR SENTINEL.

New York, as the real center of the national financial operations, has lately witnessed some extraordinary transactions. The enormous subscriptions to the new 4 per cent. loans made by our bankers, who, contrary to all precedent, actually had the Treasury by ink for the benefit of the hundred millions, were events as memorable as they were gratifying; and the present rush for the new ten dollar certificates is no less noteworthy. This loan is located entirely without pushing, of the intervention of the banks and even public instruction intended to regulate absorption; but the rush for them here is tremendous. The Sub-Treasury on Wall street and the Post Office are the points of supply, and every day, long before the opening of the doors for selling, the waiting crowd of applicants would give a strange or the idea that each of the great stone buildings was some popular place of amusement at which the supply of tickets was limited. On the two the Post Office sells by far the larger proportion. At twelve o'clock to-day there were probably about three hundred women, men, girls and boys in line at the Post office, waiting their turn to buy. Perhaps one hundred were women. The line extended from near the north east corner of the building way around past the cashier's window, and thence to the Broadway side. One male and one female, are alternately allowed to visit the cashier's window. The sales do not begin until ten o'clock, and yet the line begins to form at about seven o'clock, so eager is the rush for a good place. The supply of certificates is frequently exhausted by one o'clock, and then there is a line of the disappointed ones.

Each applicant is allowed only $100 worth. In order to obtain larger quantities "repeating," is very frequent. Nearly a hundred people have been turned out of the Post Office for this offense in one day. Some sharp boys are making quite a respectable living by taking places in the line, and then they get near the window selling out their positions to impatient and bona fide purchasers. The clerks have to work like beavers during the hours of sale, and sell on an average $30 worth of certificates per minute. All sorts of people are the customers of the generous in this transaction, though the lower and middle classes of course predominate. Some of the investors are professional beggars. For several days the number of blind men in the line was noticeable, and afterward a there seemed to be a special visitation of cripples, so numerous were the one-legged, one armed and deformed persons in the waiting throng. Thus far, the sales of these certificates in New York have amounted to nearly three millions of dollars, of which amount the Post office has probably disposed of three-fourths, and the Sub Treasury of the remainder. It is reported that the printing facilities of the government are to be increased at once to meet this unexpected demand. Who says we are a poor people?

The Mayor of this city has this week been the recipient of a petition the like of which, I am firmly convinced, no mayor ever received before—being nothing more or less than the prayer of twenty six milliners to have their trade protected from the competitive vicissitudes of their neighbors. From many years Division street, between Catherine and Market, has been a resort for the millinery trade of the cheaper sort. On the west side of this street there were, not long ago, no fewer than fifty-one milliners' shops all in a row. As may be imagined, "competition is the life of trade" in this neighborhood. Keenly convinced that the world owed her a living, the proprietress of each of the fifty one establishments racked her brains and her resources to keep commercially ahead of the other fifty. Of course it was quite impossible for every one of them to succeed in this laudable ambition. Natural selection and the survival of the fittest did as usual their unconscious work, and eventually the infinitesimal minority of the 51 turned themselves slowly but surely approaching the wall. Up to this point, we may suppose history being silent on the subject, that the contestants confined themselves within the bounds of tolerable business fair play. That is, number 1 for instance would doubtless tell a customer that muslins at 2 to 5¢ each give were artful hussies who never paid their bills and kept nothing but last year's stock, but would perhaps hesitate to go further than that. But at last forbearance ceased to be a virtue with the aforesaid minority as it became necessaries were resorted to, to prop up their tottering fortunes. Each hired one or more stalwart damsels to stand in front of their establishment and gather in unwary passers of the feminine denomination. Their instructions were, practically if possible, but always to bring them in.

The practical working of this new system may be inferred from [illegible] which I have already referred. [illegible] ordinary business on Division street has been lively and is still carried on in a most disgraceful manner—so much that a respectable lady is unable to walk through the street without being insulted by some of the girls who are hired for the purpose of luring males in to purchase hats against their will. It was but lately that a shawl was torn off a woman's shoulders by one of these fair creatures who "wanted to sell her something." The other day a lady passed through the throng with a baby in her arms and one at the gloves at the store, trying to pull her in, almost dragged the baby out of her arms, and [illegible] whether she would "like to buy or only to look around."

XLVI. Congress—Extra Session.

CONSIDERATION was resumed, in the Senate, on the 13th, of the Legislative bill, and Mr. Windom spoke against the political legislation contained therein, and Mr. Coke replied.... In the House, Mr. Cox called attention to a petition presented on the 10th, and printed in the Record, to the effect that "the longer continuance of the session is fraught with danger to peace, and with disaster to the financial, commercial and other interests of the country; that the measures inaugurated by Congress threaten a revolution and to strike down all the principles on which a free and unmutilated ballot and just this moment this session should be speedily closed." Mr. Cox said the petition was sent to him by mail, and should not have been received, but rejected it at the time. It was, however, presented. After debate, the Speaker announced the question as to whether the Record should be corrected by the insertion of the objectionable and consequent withdrawal of the petition, and it was carried unanimously. Bills were introduced and referred, providing for issuing the silver dollar and fractional silver coin; authorizing the coinage of a silver dollar and fractional silver coin; full standard silver dollars, following the silver dollar; making appropriations for the support of the army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880; providing for the issue of legal-tender notes in place of the present of National Bank notes; and for the exaction of the tax on State and National Banks; and the re-submission of the rights of property and industry, proposing a Constitutional amendment fixing the President's term of office at six years, making the law providing for compensation of the President. The President's Message vetoing the Military Interference bill was read. A motion to suspend the rules and pass the following appropriations for the support of the army was defeated: 121 to 139—all members voting with the Republicans in the affirmative and one with the Democrats in the negative.

THE House bill for the exchange of subsidiary coin for legal-tender money was reported in the Senate, from the Committee on Finance on the 14th. In the Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill was taken up, and after debate, a motion to strike out the clause directing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay arrearages of pensions with the $10,000,000 legal-tender money kept in the Treasury as a special fund for the redemption of fractional currency was defeated: yeas, 25; nays, 30.... In the House, personal explanations were made by several members, after which the previous question was moved on the passage of the Army Appropriation bill. Numerous dilatory motions and parliamentary interferences full over the President's veto, and the bill was passed over the veto: yeas, 149; less than the requisite two-thirds in the affirmative, two of the affirmatives being from the Democrats in the affirmative and three Nays, Butler, Ferdinando Wood and Wright, of Pa. The bill restores to the Congress laws and customs and Indian civil service, abolished, and an amendment was offered that after January 1, 1880, and be deprived of the right to appoint officers of the Courts. The Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill was then considered, and a general debate ensued on the various provisions of the bill. Mr. Conger, of Mich., offered an amendment, which was agreed to, appropriating $?0,000 for the payment of the expenses of the President to meet commissioners appointed by the Republic of Mexico to negotiate a treaty of commerce between that country and the United States. The House resumed consideration of the bill to amend the existing laws relating to gold and silver coinage and coin and bullion certificates, and to restore to silver bullion the privilege of free coinage to silver bullion in the United States was finally rejected—97 to 125. Adjourned to the 20th.

THE plan is favorably spoken of, in a mechanical journal, of drilling triangular holes for blasting—that is, when boring for blasting purposes, to make the holes of a triangular section, instead of circular, as by the ordinary method, and to effect this the boring bar or jumper is partly turned on each side of its cutting alternately. No difficulty is experienced in boring the holes to this shape, and they are found more effective than round holes—the corners forming points at which the material operated on appears to commence, the line of fracture usually forming a prolongation of the triangle. Holes averaging three feet six inches in depth are easily made, in this way, in from thirty to forty minutes. The powder charges vary from one to two pounds, according to circumstances.—Exchange.

SINGULAR MARRIAGE.

A Beautiful and Accomplished Young Lady of Beaver, Pa., Wedded to a Colored Coal-Shiner.

A social sensation of an unusual character has come to light in Beaver County, Pa., only a few miles from Pittsburgh. Annie Moore, or Jones, as she must now be called, is the only daughter and youngest child of a well-to-do gentleman, a United States Government Storekeeper in Indiana County, but a resident of Beaver. Her three brothers occupy positions of public esteem, two of them being talented members of the Beaver County Bar, and one an accomplished Philadelphia physician. The family is highly connected, ex-Chief-Justice Agnew being her uncle and Judge Hice (Judge of Beaver County) her cousin by marriage. She is a beautiful and highly-educated girl, twenty years of age, but has always been of a headstrong disposition, and, being an only daughter, she was allowed to have pretty much her own way. It is even said that one of her brothers so vexed her a day or two ago for some reason or other, which might seem trivial, but She left home yesterday, which was the last that was seen of her until this morning, from George Jones, a colored coal-miner, walked into the house of the Rev. Robinson (colored) at Rochester, accompanied by one Mr. Mc-Kinnan, Clerk of the Commissioners of Beaver County, passing by, was called in, and, though not recognizing Miss M. at first sight, supposed the marriage ceremony. Miss M. being of rather dark complexion, it is possible that even the clergyman was ignorant of her social standing at the time. The couple quickly returned to Beaver, and made immediate arrangements for housekeeping. They went to what is known as the Murata place, near the Fair-Ground, a small house of four rooms, which they share in common with several blacks. She then sent home for her piano and trunk.

It is needless to say her strange freak has greatly distressed her family and friends. The community is greatly excited over the remarkable affair, and some of the young men feel like tarring and feathering the negro for taking advantage of the thoughtless girl, but the older and wiser heads counsel forbearance. They think that out of respect to the esteemed family no further notice should be taken of the matter, the wedding of a white lady to a negro the ultimate solution of alum, and then quarrel with a decoction of one part Campeachy wood and eleven parts water. This decoction should be first filtered and slowly boiled down to one-half its volume, when ten to fifteen drops of neutral tincture of indigo should be added for every quart it contains. After the application of this solution the wool should be carefully washed in soft water, and a saturated solution of verdigris in acetic acid until the desired tint is obtained.

—The nail gun, as it is called, is a recent foreign device for nailing down flooring boards, the inventor claiming that it is quicker in its work and insures greater cleanliness than hand-nailing. The apparatus is described as not unlike a gun in shape and of about the same length. It is kept in position with the foot and knee, and the nail is placed—point down—in an aperture at the top of the device. It slides down to the bottom, and then the operator draws up a rod, and, by one downward stroke of this, the nail is clenched driven into the boards beneath. So simple and effective is the contrivance said to be, that, as alleged, it can do the work of as many as half a dozen men. The originator of this curious implement is said to be disparaging the mechanism in various particulars, and expects to render it self-feeding, in which case he has no doubt of its general adoption.—*N. Whose Pants Were They?

A curious mistake occurred on a train out of New York on the New Haven Road, Thursday, says the New Haven Register. It shall have no trouble you to rise," said a farmer making a dive for a package in a seat in which a passenger was sitting. "No you don't," exclaimed the other, seizing the package, "what are you doing?" "They're mine!" said the farmer. "No, you're mistaken." explained the possessor, strengthening his hold on them. "they're mine," said the farmer, trying to take 'em," said the farmer, "they're mine, an' I bought 'em at Blunk's myself." "No you didn't neither!" exclaimed the other excitedly. "I bought 'em at Blank's myself." "Well, I guess you're a sharper!" said the farmer; "don't I know my own pants? I tore the pair of pantaloons in that air bundle, an' I can describe 'em." "So can I, and they ain't yours," shouted the other angrily; "a pair of black pantaloons with a little check of white runnin' over the legs." "Yes that's it! and them's mine!" said the farmer, grabbing them again; "why, I hadn't been out of sight o' 'em a minute." "Let go of them clothes!" said the other savagely; "if you don't I'll make you!" and he seized hold of them, too. "I paid for 'em, and I'm going to have 'em!" declared the farmer, earnestly, "and I'll bet you 'rested by the first Constable in Connecticut." "Not much you won't," replied the owner of the pants in the seat; "I paid three dollars for 'em." "No you didn't. I paid three dollars for 'em, and I've got the receipt right here in my pocket," and he flourished it triumphantly. "So have I!" cried the other, and he produced Blank's receipt, sure, to the bewilderment of both and the great amusement of the passengers. It seems that each, curiously enough, had bought a pair of three-dollar pantaloons at the same store, and one had lost his pair, but neither knew which it was.

Food.

The use of food by different persons should be regulated in quantity or character, or in both, according to their ages, their health and occupation, and the seasons and the climate in which they live.

Milk is the only perfect food for infants. It is the best food for children and youth up to the age of sixteen. Old people are weaker in their digestive powers, partly because their whole systems are weaker, and partly because of their diminished muscular activity. Their food should be less in quantity than that used by younger persons, and of easier digestion.

In summer and in warm climates less food by one-third is needed, the tone of the system being lowered, and persons thus being unable either to digest or to assimilate as much as in winter and in colder latitudes.

So also fat, sugar and starch—the latter includes fine flour—being mainly heat-making elements, should be but little used in summer and in tropical regions, and largely used in winter and in cold climates. Cornbread, which contains a large per cent. of fat, is better adapted for food in winter than in summer.

Shoemakers, tailors, and people of sedentary habits, generally need less food, and food that is more easily digested, than the farmer, and all persons who work hard in the open air. Still, everybody should have enough of active exercise to be able to digest a generous diet.

A thinker needs a good supply of brain food, such as is liberally furnished in oatmeal; but he must keep his brain at the expense of vigorous muscles, for it is muscles that have to work and nourish the stomach, but the lungs and heart.

The sick of course, need food carefully adapted to their particular condition, and those who are not in full health may greatly help themselves by rejecting whatever they find injurious to them.—Youth's Companion.

MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

—One of the latest applications of vulcanized rubber in England is to renders china, stone and glass noiseless. It is applied in the form of narrow strips inserted in grooves.

—One hundred and sixty-two authentic cases of living burial are put on record by the eminent French physician, Bouat. The period of unconsciousness before burial, in these cases, lasted from two hours to forty-two. The causes of apparent death were these: Syncope, hysteria, apoplexy, mania, concussion of brain, anæsthesia, lightning and drunkenness.

—A German inventor proposes to make boots that will never wear out. He mixes with a water-proof glue a suitable quantity of clean quartz sand, which is spread on the thin leather soles employed as a foundation. These quartz soles are said to be flexible and almost indestructible, while they enable the wearer to walk safely over slippery roads.

—Oak, says Der Techniker, may be so dyed as to resemble ebony. Soak it for forty-eight hours in a hot saturated solution of alum, and then paint it with a decoction of one part Campeachy wood and eleven parts water. This decoction should be first filtered and slowly boiled down to one-half its volume, when ten to fifteen drops of neutral tincture of indigo should be added for every quart it contains. After the application of this solution the wood should be carefully washed in soft water, and a saturated solution of verdigris in acetic acid until the desired tint is obtained.

—"Sit down, ma'am," I said; "my mother was a widow. I will help you if I can; let me hear your story."

She took the proffered chair, and the tired expression slowly faded from her face as she proceeded: "My name is Mrs. Coutts. I've kept boarders ever since my husband died—mostly on—for nigh fifteen years. I may have been my bad luck, but it has always been my luck to get a house, trying to please everybody and make one dollar overtake another in hard. What with my heart in my mouth on account of fish-bones and children, and people turning up their noses at my butter, and humming and hawing about the price of board, and high-fliers clearing out and forgetting to pay, and napkins always falling short, and good cooks getting drunk, and bad ones dropping hair in the soup and sending in the mutton raw—I've been so badgered and worried that it would often have been a relief to take away for an hour, if only to have a tooth pulled.

"I seemed as if you were the whole world to your mother, didn't 'ee? but somehow a boy can't be so near as a girl; a girl is always at your apron-strings. At night, when the dishes were washed and everything settled down, there was Myra, sweet and innocent looking. Did you ever see a brown, scaly foot like my sister's that hasn't been in Heaven many a year —where your mother is. When night came it just rested me to look at her. She trotted up and down stairs and along the pavements after me as busy as a bee, but, you'd thought, to see her asleep, she had been playing in Paradise all day and dreaming of Heaven all night. She was the real contented kind. I was willing to work and wear fingers to the bone for Myra. Everybody loved the child when she was little, and she grew more so as she grew bigger. She was tiptop at her lessons; she did her sums beautiful and sang like a bird. Sometimes I used to think I ought to teach her about housework and such like. But girls, if they live long enough, are pretty sure to have a heart-breaking time somewhere, somehow; so I did my pot-walloping myself, and let my bit of sunshine take it easy while she could. I don't say I ought to have put my foot down and say I did. Myra wasn't one to scuffle through the world as I could. So, like the wind from the sea-board, my pet came and went through the house as she pleased, and made everybody glad that looked upon her.

"Well! Mrs. Street lived opposite us. Mr. Street had the biggest store, filled with silks and satins, and he had no end of money in bank. His son Frank used to walk to school with my Myra and carry her books and slate. I can't remember when they were first sweet on each other. I might have known how it would all end; it was but natural that rich folks should want their only son to marry a girl who had not a cent and whose mother kept a boarding-house. I always liked Frank, though, he had such straight-forward eyes. And Mrs. Street used to ask Myra to tea every once and a while—just on account of Frank, you know. Why, I watched those two just as I would children playing jack-straws, they did have such a good time.

"One day, before I began to think of such a thing (Myra had just put on long dresses), Frank came to me, shamefaced as a girl, and real manly-looking, too, and he said, 'Mrs. Coutts, I want Myra for my wife, and I'll try and take good care of her.' What could I say? Mr. Frank, I'll give you an answer to-morrow,' was what I told him. I made up my mind to go to Mrs. Street's, and if Myra was not welcome in the family I'd rather she would break her heart at once than be married and die by inches. She was my child, but she was goodness itself to be the wife of the King of England. My eyes were open wider than a hawk's all that night, and I kept thinking over and over how I would stand up to Mrs. Street and battle for Myra. The next morning, as I had brought my basket home from market, I determined to go. First, I thought I would put on my black silk dress that my husband sold after he had sent me four years before. But I was too proud; she must take me as I was, and I would go in my every-day rig. So I crossed over to Mrs. Street's house. There were blue satin chairs in the parlor, and when I saw two women in brown stuff frocks walk toward me out of the big looking-glasses, I sort of wished I had worn the other dress that was hanging up in the closet at home.

"Mrs. Street was in the room watering some lvies, and she said very friendly like, 'Good morning, Mrs. Coutts; you sit down?' 'No, I thank you, ma'am,' was all I could answer; 'I must soon be home to get dinner; I just came to see you on a little business,' and then I blurted it out all at once: 'It's about Myra. I have never enticed your son Frank, and I would rather that my sister's child's rich fine lady it would suit me just as well.' I trembled so that I had to hold on to a big chair. Mrs. Myra was all I had, you know. Mrs. Street took my rough brown hand in her soft white one, just as if I was sick with fever, and she said, 'Why, Mrs. Coutts, Myra is the dearest girl in the world and I know all about it.'

"I grew right down; I couldn't say a word. If she had pitched into me I could have talked all day like a house afire, primed to fight for Myra; but I hadn't allowed for any such thing. I was such an old fool that, though I was in that grand parlor, I boo-hooed right out. Mrs. Myra was the apple of my eye. I can't tell you how I felt; I believe I could have lain right down and let Mrs. Street walk over my body into one, just as if I was sick with fever, and she said, 'Why, Mrs. Coutts, Myra is the dearest girl in the world and I know all about it.'

Mr Horner is a Clergyman of the Church of the Brethren, commonly known as the Dunkers, or German Baptists. They are tecnically primitive Christians, and believe in repentance, faith and baptism, will not engage in war, accept, or consent to the administering of oaths, tenderer scrutiny, and demonstrate the utmost humility, and simplicity of attire, washing each others' feet at their communion, and other like symbols of meekness. The Difference.

From the Cincinnati Inter-Ocean.

David Davis may be a bigger boss than Zach Chandler, but they do not have to go around and bind up the wounded and bury the dead after he goes off, as they do when Russell Merkinder fires "a load for bear."

It has been charged that the Confederate Democrats design to destroy the army, in order to reconstruct it under Confederate officers, as a Democratic machine. The Kenton, Ohio, Democrat proves this charge to be true, by pas sionately exclaiming: "Let the army go to the devil." This, of course, means: Let the army go to the Confederate Democratic party.

In his charge to the grand jurors at the opening of the United States Court at Marquette, on the 4th inst., Judge Withey virtually declared the position taken by the Republicans in Congress to be a sound one, in saying: "The state is supreme in the enactment and the enforcement of its laws and the United States is equally sovereign in the enactment and enforcement of its laws."

"Mene, Mene, Tekel, Upharsin."

From the New York Tribune.

The old war horse, Zach Chandler, has given the rebels in the Senate another dose of Hail Columbia and chain lightning. He prophesied to them that they would dig their own sepulchres, and that they would have no politicst power after 1881. He made it hot on this occasion for the Northern dough faces in the Senate, and denounced them as the willing tools of their Southern masters in the caucus of the Rebel Democracy. Zach Chandler's popular style is eloquence itself, and this fiery loyal speech will make more impression upon the loyal North than the most elaborate efforts of an Edmunds, Conkling, Carpenter or other statesmen. The old war hero of Michigan understands how to touch the heart and lives of the loyal millions, and we now say that no one will have contributed more towards the coming victory of the Union over the newly resurrected Rebellion in 1880 than Zach Chandler of Michigan.

If you want a nice set of glass ware, Give us a call for we have got the nicest assortment that ever was in this town at Fox, Rose & Butlers.

Republican papers may as well stop jabbing at the Confederate Democrats the old peacock that he laughs best. The Confederate Democrats don't care a straw who laughs best, they aren't in the laughing business now; and they don't care where the laughing championship goes. But if anybody wants to bet on the guessing of teeth championship, they want to be counted right in.

Wade Hampton does fairly as a speaker in his native South Carolina wilds, where for any Republican to attempt a reply to him would be the livite hurt, by the shotguns of the Hampton red shirts; but, in the Senate, where he has to encounter men in free debate, he proved a fizzle failure in his first attempt. Rising to make a personal explanation, Thursday, he denied that he was, or had claimed to be, the author of that plank in the Democratic national platform of 1868 which reads:

We regard the reconstruction acts, so called, of Congress, as unconstitutional, revolutionary and void.

Mr. Hampton delivered this in his most imposing, that settles it manner. As he concluded, Senator Wind om concluded under his desk and drew out a copy of a Charleston, South Carolina, Democratic paper, which has the credit of being Hampton's own organ, and rising he read from it a report of a speech made by Wade Hampton, in which Hampton said that he was the author of the plank, saying: "That was my plank." This unexpected reply greatly confused Hampton. He offered the lame explanation that he only meant that he indorsed that plank. But Senator Windom also read from another report in South Carolina papers an account of a dinner at which Wade Hampton proposed the following toast:

Our fallen heroes; I do not believe they have fallen in vain. The cause for which Jackson and Stuart fell cannot be in vain, but in some form will yet triumph, I propose. The Lost Cause, for which our heroes fell.

To this Hampton had no reply to make. He has found that it is quite a different thing to face a free debate in the Senate than it is to speak west he pleases in South Carolina, backed by armed red shirts, ready to shoot any Republican who attempts to reply.

THE SOCIAL.—The Ladies' Aid Society Social held last Tuesday evening at the new SENTINEL rooms was well attended, and well enjoyed, and resulted well financially for the society.

JOHN HUNT, of Lewisville Wayne Co., Mich., has purchased three lots and a dock privilege of N. Morgan, at Boyne, and 280 acres of land on Deer Lake, and proposes to ship wood to Chicago, and other ports.

THE Detroit conference will convene at Ann Arbor September 10, 1879, and Bishop Bowman will preside. The Michigan conference will meet at Ionia September 10, 1879 and Bishop Foster will preside.

D. C. NETTLETON has been again appointed by Col. Mansfield as Government Inspector on the Charlevoix harbor work Mr. Nettleton's past experience in this position makes the appointment a good one.

NETTLETON'S wagon shop has just completed a stage for the Boyne Falls and Charlevoix route, which can't be excelled in Grand Traverse. It is strongly built, substantially ironed, and is the workmanship of A. Leusing.

SMITH BARNES, Esq., of the firm of Haunstz, Lay & Co., has left Traverse City for a European Trip. He will be accompanied by his wife, and goes armed with letters of introduction to several U. S. Ministers. Grand Traverse will wish Mr. Barnes and his lady God speed.

THE proprietor of the SENTINEL has opened in the postoffice room, a News and Stationery counter, which he proposes to make headquarters for all articles usually kept at an establishment of that kind. Call in and look over the stock and give us a share of your patronage.

THE steamer which we mentioned last week as being built at Cadillac, for this country, will be launched at Traverse City about the 1st of June, where she will also receive her engine of 25 horse power. Her length is 65 feet, and 14 foot beam. She is to be used for excursion parties between Petoskey and Mackinaw, by her owner, J. C Hazelton.—Record.

REAL ESTATE.—O. D. Wood has purchased of Mrs. H. L. Clifford, through E. H. Green, her agent, six lots in Newman's addition to the village of Charlevoix, for the sum of $400. These lots adjoin the property already owned by Mr Wood on the south side of the harbor.

—E. H. Green last week sold to Geo. Estell Lot 12 of Block 9 of the village of Charlevoix.

HARBOR CONTRACT.—Everybody will be glad to learn that the contract for improving Charlevoix harbor has been let to Carkin, Stickney & Cram, who had the contract under the first appropriation for this harbor. This firm is one of the best known and most reliable of any in the business, and we consider Charlevoix decidedly in luck in the circumstances of their second successful bid on our work. The dredging is to be done for thirteen cents per cubic yard. The first work will probably be

The New Sentinel Building.

Out of the Old House, and Up Into the New.

A Brief Review of the Sentinel's Career.

Early in March 1880 a sleigh load of printing material arrived in Charlevoix, and following it, with all his earthly possessions in a small—very small—valise, and an empty pocket book, owning not one type of the outfit which preceded him, came the stripling whose name now appears in this journal as its editor ad proprietor.

We were installed by the owner, Hon. D. C. Leach, as publisher, and Hon. E. H. Green was clothed with the editorial robe. The first copy of the SENTINEL was printed in the front room of the old Charlevoix House, on the north side. It was issued from these quarters for a few months, when necessity compelled a removal to the upper rear end of the old Kyes building, now occupied by Geo. Bettune. From here it was removed to a bell room in the southeast upper corner of the Chamberlain building on Bridge street.

Less than two years passed with these changes, when the publisher purchased the paper, of its owner, and erected a small office on Main street, on the lot now occupied by his residence. It involved an expense of about $250, and a reference to our files at this moment shows the earnestness with which we appealed to our patrons to pay up, in view of this tremendious outlay. Two years elapsed, and the SENTINEL office was placed upon runners and drawn to Bridge street, where it has since remained, and now reposes, empty and disconsolate, under the shadow of its successor

THE NEW BUILDING.

We have triumpeted the fourthcoming new SENTINEL building so loudly for the past several months, that it seems unnecessary for us to even make the announcement that we are in our new quarters, as snug as "a bug in a rug."

The building fronts on Bridge street, and is 22x35 in size, and 21 feet to the top of the pinnacle. It has a handsome half bathement front, and presents a fine appearance from the street. As we have before stated, the Masonic Fraternity have a permanent lease of the upper story, and will occupy it as a hall.

The lower story is divided into three rooms and are used as follows; The front room is 20 feet deep, and serves as a postoffice, stationery store and news depot. The front is glazed with Double thick glass, and was made by Grielick & Co. of Traverse City.

Just off this room, we enter by one door the printing office, and by another the editorial room. The printing office is large, well arranged, and well lighted.

The editorial room, wherein we pen this article, although the work slap of a modest man, is one which would do honor to the editor in chief of a leading daily. A cheerful carpet covers the floor, and neat ash and walnut furniture adorn the room. In fact we have taken pains to make this room, where the hard work of journalism is done, pleasant as well as comfortable. The ceilings throughout are eleven feet high and facilities for ventilating are ample.

We have thus hastily described the rooms wherein our work is done, not through motives of pride (yet we are a trifle proud) but that our readers and patrons outside of our village may know something of them.

All unite in saying that the building is a credit to Charlevoix. The building and finishing of the lower rooms was under the direction of Mannay & Kirkpatrick, of Charlevoix, and their skill is manifest in every part. The plastering was done by Messrs Myers and Rudy, of this place, and the painting by James Hemmings and D. J. Parisl, We say the building is a credit to these workmen.

We can safely claim that with one exception (by rights) we have the best printing and editorial rooms in Grand Traverse, and, they are not leased.

This our SENTINEL, after an existence of ten years, has built a home that will be a necessary for us to even make the

RELIGIOUS AND EDUCATIONAL.

—The Presbyterian overture on representation has been defeated. The total negative vote is 94 Presbyteries: the affirmative is 43. It is thought that the negative vote will reach twothirds of the whole number of Presbyteries—179.

—The first Arch-Confraternity of the Roman Catholic Church known to have been established in England has just been founded by Pope Leo XIII., who has erected the Confraternity of Servants of the Holy Ghost, attached to the Church of St. Mary of the Angels, Bayswater, into an Arch-Confraternity.

—The Brooklyn Sunday - School Union contains 131 schools, with 46,526 scholars. The Methodists lead in the number of schools, having 28, the Presbyterians come next, with 22; then the Congregationalists, with 21; the Baptists, with 17; the Reformed Church, with 10; the Lutherans, with 5; the other churches making up the total number.

—The English papers are calling attention to the fact that the expense of the American revision of the Bible is borne by private means. One of them says: "Bible revision appears to love Privately patrons in the United States. During the six years in which the revisers have been at work the expenses have been heavy. They spend three half days in each month in the Bible House at New York, and the outlay for traveling and entertainment has to be defrayed. Yet no appeal has been made to the general public. All the expenses have thus far been defrayed quietly by a few munificent and modest friends."

—It is a question which the Methodist General Conference itself will have to settle next year, whether Bishops shall be elected in place of those who have died since 1871, when the last election was held. Since that time, when eight Bishops were chosen, Bishops Morris, Janes and Ames have passed away, leaving only ten to do the episcopal work of a large Church. The General Conference would not probably hold an election for less than three; but as the number of annual Conferences is constantly increasing, and one Bishop is continually away visiting foreign missions, the Conference may decide to increase the number beyond thirteen.

—The pastor of a church in Northeast Baltimore, last week, devised a new way to collect pew rents. Several of his congregation being rentals in their settlements, he ordered the pews of the delinquents to be nailed up, quite a number were thus secured, and the pastor announced that he had adopted this means to secure the prompt payment of the money due him, without which he could not conduct the affairs of the church satisfactorily. He called attention to the fact that the delinquents were nearly all, if not all, able to pay. Their wives and daughters bristled with silks and satins, flounces and furbelows, and the pew rent remained unpaid. The novel expedient has proved a complete success.—Baltimore Gazette.

—A careful estimate respecting the circulation of the Bible during the past century places the total at the enormous number of nearly 350,000,000 copies. The British and Foreign Society is in advance of any other institution of the kind as regards the number of copies issued. It was founded in 1804, and has circulated upward of 82,000,000 copies. The American Society, founded thirteen years later, has caused a circulation of 35,000,000. These two organizations are far in advance of all others. Next in respect of copies circulated are the German societies, which together have issued 8,500,000. Then comes the National Society of Scotland, with nearly 4,768,000, then the Hibernian with 4,180,000, the Swiss with nearly 2,000,000 and the French with 1,600,000. The National Society of Scotland has circulated its 4,768,000 copies since 1861, the year in which it was founded.—Chicago Times.

MECHANICAL AND SCIENTIFIC.

—The Egyptian pen is a marvelous instance of resurrection, or rather of resuscitation. Preserved three or four thousand years, enfolded in the clothes of a mummy, planted in the soil of another Continent, they bloom and produce their kind.

—Dr. Von Hayek, at Vienna, strongly advocates the adoption of the goat as a domestic animal, and, by small farmers, as a dairy animal. He urges that they livemostly on refuse, and cost little to keep; and that their milk makes a highly-prized cheese.

—A striking analogy between animal and plant life has been discovered by Mr. Van der Harri, of Utrecht. When the common garden bean begins to sprout, it is found to contain a ferment very closely resembling pepsin, which can be extracted by means of glycerine. This ferment has the power of changing albuminous into peptonic substances, and starch into glucose. It is found exclusively in the cotyledons. In the case of flesh-eating plants, all the steps of digestion seem to take place in the same manner as in animals.

—According to the Chemical Journal, glycerine retards both lactic and alcoholic fermentations. One-fifth of glycerine added to milk at a temperature of 15 to 20 deg. Cent., prevents it from turning sour for eight or ten days; one-half or one-third of glycerine, at the same temperature, retards the fermentation of milk for six or seven weeks. At higher temperatures, larger quantities are needed to produce the same results. The formation of hydrocyanic acid from amygdaline and coniine is also retarded by glycerine, and it thus becomes very serviceable in preventing the spoiling of various lotions—say, the addition of a small quantity to such preparations as the milk of roses, almond paste, etc.

—Dr. Jackson offers the opinion that the refusal to take proper physical rest when tired from labor is one of the most powerful inducements to the consumption of ardent spirits. Men work until they get so tired that they cannot wait to feel sensibly rested by the progress of change which goes on in the system from the suspension of labor. They either want to work more hours than they are able to do, or, when they have done as much as they feel themselves at liberty to do, they are so tired they cannot rest. They therefore get rest in artificial ways, by resorting to eating and drinking. Some drink tea or coffee, others chew or smoke tobacco, but the great majority of tired people in this country—and the larger share of our people are tired—drink ardent spirits in some or other of its forms of preparations. They fall back on stimulants instead of the intrinsic vitalities of their bodies.

—By means of a recent discovery, as is alleged, the negative of a photograph can, through the agency of chemicals, light and electricity, be transferred to copper or brass plates, in such a manner as to give the plate the appearance of having been executed by an expert engraver. Thus, in copying works of art, every line, every brush mark is profined with sterling fidelity, while in landscapes, every leaf and blade of grass can be seen exactly as Nature made and where Nature placed it. In portraiture from life the very texture of the skin and all the minutiæ of expression are, according to the description, given with a faithfulness which would be impossible to the steadiest hand and sharpest eye. In printing from these plates, no chemical ink is employed, plain printers' ink being all that is required. The expense is but slight, as compared with that for work of similar quality by any other process.—N. Y. Sun.

Plain and Plaited Skirts, Etc.

Notwithstanding the prevalence of trimmed skirts in the present styles, some of the richest and most elegant costumes worn on Fifth avenue have plain skirts without a single flounce. These skirts are plain and round in shape, consisting of five breadths, viz., a gored front breadth, a side gore on each side, and two gored straight back breadths of single-width goods. They are usually lined throughout, and have stiffer crinoline facing at the bottom than trimmed skirts have, as they need to be kept firmly in place; the edges of the skirt are turned up two inches on the facing instead of being bound with braid. Ladies who are weary of the weight and the expense of flounced skirts welcome the revival of this simple fashion. At present thick, self-supporting fabrics are most used for these walking-skirts, such as corduroys, plain satin, cloth or velvet, but the same simple cut is also seen in striped goods, especially silk, with stripes of satin or of moire. Both very bouffant and very plainly-draped overdresses are seen with such skirts. For instance, a black, plain skirt of silk, half-inch stripes alternately of silk and satin is worn with a black camel's-hair polonaise cut in Marguerite shape behind, while the fronts slope sharply open from the waist-line to disclose the striped skirt front its entire length. A gayer costume has a very dark wine-colored satin skirt entirely without flounces, above which are a very short bouffant panier overskirt and basque of the new tan-colored mousseline de laine. A black brocaded cloth suit of the finest luster has a plain skirt with a short apron overskirt that is held high on the sides by a buttoned loop or strap of the cloth, and has two panier drapings of clustered plaits behind. The edges of this overskirt are simply stitched; the basque is very short all around, and is single-breasted, being sloped open sharply below the waist line. Correspondents who have asked how to make cloth traveling suits and flannel dresses for yachting and for the country will do well to use this trim design. There is an effort to conceal these plain skirts by long overdresses; on the contrary, they are often worn with polonaises that have scarcely any front below the wide belt worn at the waist. Corduroy plain skirts are worn with long straight paletots or redingotes that have no drapery either front or back; these redingotes are of light drab or tan-colored camel's hair or cloth, or else dark seal-brown is chosen. This costume is very handsome for traveling dresses, and is liked for its severe style.

Plaited skirts are the popular and universal fashion, while plain skirts are as yet only worn by leaders of fashion. These are the regular kilts, beginning at the belt, or else attached to a yoke, and the preference is for loose-looking plaits suspended from the yoke, without being mounted on a plain round skirt; tapes at intervals pass around the skirt and hold it in place, and many thin wooden kilts, such as mousseline de laine and bunting, are lined throughout with paper muslin. Large loose-looking kilt plaits are more stylish than small close ones. Sometimes a large plait and a small one alternate, while other skirts are box-plaited all around. In all these skirts a wide box plait is in front from the waist down, and many skirts that are not plaited all around have the front width laid in a great box plait, with side plaits turning back from it. This is a great deal used in the black silk skirts that women of small means use with various over-dresses. The religious plaiting of fine small plaits the whole length of the front is also much used. Woolen kilt skirts—and this fashion is most appropriate for wool goods—have a border of the trimming three inches wide placed near the bottom. Where greater economy is considered, and the weight of a kilt is too great, box plaits of wool goods, of satin, or of silk, are set at wide intervals down the whole length of the front of the skirt, and these are shortened on the sides and back.

The flounces most used are shirred lengthwise, plaited and festooned. There is also a fancy for a pyramid of narrow pinks from the knee down in the middle of the front breadth, while the flat, striped front of an overskirt, or else the curtain fronts, are draped each side of this pyramid. Skirts with three wide-plaited flounces in the back are also very fashionable, especially for black costumes; the overdress is then always confined to the front of the skirt. This is sometimes overcome, and the flounces are in front only, with a long redingote back to the overskirt. There are also peplum polonaises that hang on the sides only, and display the back of the skirt from the belt down; the skirt then owes the agency of deminads, plaits, or else it has three or four widelyplaited flounces, or perhaps a series of small knife-plaitings set on horizontally.

Short basques are again revived on account of the panier drapery of the overskirt, which must be very near the belt. Basques are also much worn with belts that may pass all round, or else be confined merely to the front. The bouffant scarf-like panier draping is usually set on the upper part of the lower skirt, but may be attached to the basque, beginning at the end of the second dart, and forming three or four folds on the hips, or else the basque may be cut longer and draped in folds. Separate vests are now not so much used as those sewed in with the basque, and seen only at top and bottom.

Sashes are suddenly revived in rich brocaded ribbon, satin and watered ribbon. Worth drapes a brocaded sash permanently almost straight around the hips, and fastens it by a very large gilt buckle on the left side. A brown brocaded sash is very handsome on the tan and cream-colored wool costumes. Sometimes wide black watered ribbon is passed around the waist as a belt, and hangs down the front with one very long flat loop and two lunger ends; this is on black silk costumes. With other black dresses gay Watteau and Roman sashes are worn in the careless Oriental style, loose about the hips, and with a large knot and long ends hanging down on one side.

Bands of bunting trimmed with polka-dotted satin of contrasting color are greatly in favor with young ladies and misses. They are made with basque and overskirt and with plaited skirt, like woolen kilt skirts—and this fashion is most appropriate for wool goods—have a border of the trimming three inches wide placed near the bottom. Where greater economy is considered, and the weight of a kilt is too great, box plaits of wool goods, of satin, or of silk, are set at wide intervals down the whole length of the front of the skirt, and these are shortened on the sides and back.

Blue or brown satin with polka dots is most used on tan, white and cream-colored buntings; the navy blue bunting has lost favor. There are neat suits of American bunting with satin trimming for twenty-five dollars. Others of white bunting have the gay handkerchief pattern for trimming, especially in red and yellow, and bows of old gold and cardinal satin ribbon. The more expensive French buntings have a kilt skirt and a bouffant apron overskirt that is caught up very high on the sides by lengthwise shirring. Others have the apron of the bunting made like a scarf, with the selvedge across the bottom merely turned up and hemmed by blind stitches. Machine stitching is rather heavy for this light wool goods. Watered silk, shirred flounces silk for bonnet drapery, belts and sashes, and much polka-dotted satin are used for trimming these soft graceful fabrics.—Harper's Bazar.

The Death Penalty.

Capital punishment was abolished in Switzerland four years ago, and since its abolition there has been such an increase in the country in crimes of violence, especially of murder, that petitions, signed by 30,000 persons, for restoration of the death penalty have been presented to the Federal Council. The Council has been seriously considering the question for six months, and has decided that the statistics of four years do not give data sufficient for a definite and satisfactory conclusion. They have looked up the facts and figures of crime in other lands, where murder is punishable and punished with death, and find that violence has increased there not less than in Switzerland. In England there were twenty-two executions in 1877, against four in 1871; in Belgium, ninety-two in 1877, against sixty-two in 1871, and in France thirty-one in both years. In Denmark, Holland, Italy, Germany and Austria, murder has terribly augmented in the same time, and is due, in the opinion of Council, to growth of misery, licentiousness and intemperance. The last four or five years have been specially marked by poverty, wretchedness and suffering throughout civilization, and where these are in usual proportion, crime is to be sin is the direct or indirect result of unhappiness in some form.—N. Y. Times.

[The people of Switzerland have recently voted upon the question, and decided by a large majority to reestablish the death penalty.]

A TREMENDOUS JUMP.

Sam Patch's Great Leap Eclipsed—A Man Jumps From the Suspension Bridge at Niagara Into the River Below, a Distance of Nearly 200 Feet.

[Special to Chicago Tribune.]
SUSPENSION BRIDGE, NIAGARA FALLS, May 28.

A large number of people visited this place to-day to witness Harmon Peer in the performance of his jump from the new Suspension Bridge to the Falls into the river, according to announcements circulated throughout a large section of the country for some weeks past. Peer made his appearance on the bridge about three p. m. He was dressed in a white Guernsey shirt, drawers and blue trunks, outside of which he wore a sort of rubber coat of mail of a sufficient thickness to protect his person from serious injury in its concussion with the water, yet not so heavy as to impart any appearance of clumsiness.

In the center of the bridge from which point he jumped, or rather let go, was a little windlass hung on a cycling about six inches in diameter, on which was wound about 220 feet of very light copper wire, fastened to his body in such a manner as to keep his body in an upright position during the descent without in any degree impeding his progress. Considerable excitement was manifested by the large crowds assembled along the tops of the banks on either side of the river. Peer climbed over the railing of the bridge from his factory to descending. But this was greatly intensified when he hung only by his hands to the very bottom timbers of the structure, with nothing between him and the river below, a distance of exactly 196 feet. He suddenly loosed his hold amid cries of "Oh! oh!" from the spectators, quickly placed his hands under his arms, in which position they remained during his perilous trip, which lasted but four seconds. He struck the water with a thud and a splash, distinctly audible on the tops of the banks, and disappeared under the water, remaining out of sight for as many ten seconds, after which he reappeared about fifty feet from where he went down, and was quickly taken into a boat in waiting amid loud cheers from the spectators. After a short rubbing down, and before reaching the shore, he stood up in the boat, declaring the jump was not much the worse for his ducking.

Peer is about thirty years of age, about five feet ten inches high, well built, and has a prepossessing appearance. He resides at Teeterville, Colin's Norfolk, Ont.; he got his first idea of jumping when he was a seaman seven years ago, in the Caribbean Sea, accidentally being knocked off a topmast into the sea, being distant 108 feet. After that, in Milwaukee, he was accidentally thrown from a vessel's mast sixty-two feet, not being seriously injured in these falls. He jumped from Watson & Co.'s Elevator, in Milwaukee, a distance of seventy-two feet, turning twice over in his descent, and that was his last jump till he jumped to-day. There is no jump recorded to exceed this. The next best is Sam Patch's jump at Niagara Falls, of 142 feet, in 1829.

Hudson Bay Trading-Posts.

The trading and interior depot posts of the company are strange, out-of-the-looking places, built according to a general type. They stand generally upon the summit or lower back of some navigable river or lake, so as to be easily accessible to the boats which annually visit them with supplies. A trading-post is invariably a square, inclosed by immense trees or pickets, one end sunk deeply in the ground and raised about fourteen feet. A platform, about the height of an ordinary man, is carried along the inner side of the square, so as to enable anyone to peep over without danger from arrow or bullet. At the four corners are bastions, octagonal in shape, pierced with embrasures, to flank the Indians who live in the existence of cannon, and intended to strike terror to any red-skinned rebel bold enough to dispute the supremacy of the company. The entrance to the stockade is closed by two massive gates, an inner and an outer one. In the center of the square stands the residence of the factor or trader in charge, and of the upper class of employés, with about its four sides, ranged to the stockade, are ranged the trading store, the fur-room, the warehouses, servants' quarters, etc. Beside the larger dwelling rises a tall flag-staff, bearing the flag of the Company, with its motto, dervos, "Pro pelle cutem"—a skin for skin—and near by a small tower, the tones from which mark the hours of labor and rest. In front of the gate there is usually a half-breed or Indian in tasselled cap and dirty white capote, or tattered blankets. A band of horses graze in a distant meadow, while scarcely a day passes but a canoe, or bark lodges, from the frilled poles of which the smoke curls lazily, indicate the home of the aboriginal hanger-on. At one side of the palisade a few rude crosses or wooden railings, stained by rain and snow-drift, and blown over by the tempest, mark the last resting-places of the dead.

The trading-rooms at all the posts are arranged with strict reference to the wants of the peculiar custom which they attract. From the heavy joists of the low ceiling depend twine, steel-traps, tin-kettles, frying-pans, etc.; on various shelves are piled bales of cloth of all colors, capotes, blankets and caps; and in smaller divisions are placed files, scalping-knives, gun screws, flints, balls of twine, fire steels, canoe awls and glass beads of all colors and sizes. Drawers in the counter contain needles, pins, scissors, fishhooks, thimbles and vermilion for painting canoes and faces. On the floor is strewn a variety of copper kettles, from half a pint to a gallon; and in one corner of the room stand a dozen trading-guns, and beside them a keg of powder and a bag of shot.

In some of the trade-rooms a small space is railed off by the counter near the door, behind which the Indians stand to trade. Sometimes they are confined to a separate apartment, called the Indian-room, adjoining that occupied by the traders, and business is carried on through a loop-hole communicating between the two. In many of the posts in the plain country the trade-room is cleverly contrived so as to prevent a sudden rush of the Indians, the approach from outside the pickets being through a long narrow passage, only of sufficient width to admit of one Indian at a time, and bent at an acute angle near the window at which the trader stands. This precaution is rendered necessary by the frantic desire which sometimes seizes upon the Indian to shoot the clerk, which he might easily do were the passage straight.

At most of the interior posts time moves slowly, and change is almost unknown. To-day is the same as a hundred years ago. The list of goods ordered from England for the year has exactly the same items as that of 1775. Strands, cottons, beads and trading-guns are the staples of the Indians, and are still traded for musquash and beaver.

The system of trade at the company's posts is entirely one of barter. Until recent years money values were unknown; but this medium of exchange has gradually been supplied to the Indians, and the almighty dollar is rapidly asserting its supremacy in savagedom.—H. M. Robinson, in Harper's Magazine for June.

The Master Mule.

This morning a couple of miners were seated on a bowlder alongside the road to Sutro, discussing the kicking powers of mules. They had just returned from Sutro, and the other was on the way there, and, having met near the rock, they sat down for a talk.

"Have you quit ever there?" said the one who was eastward bound.

"Yes."

"Why?"

"Mules."

"Fraid of 'em?"

"You bet."

"Well, I saw one yesterday alongside an old boiler kickin' off the rivet-heads one by one. Never missed one. Was just going on shift, and, when I saw what he was at, I observed there was more of 'em inside, I weakened and threw up my job. I've got a wife and three children dependin' on me, and I don't take chances."

"The worst mule I ever saw," said the other, "was in Peoche some years ago. It was one I owned. One day it rubbed against some nails sticking out of a post, and it turned square around and put the nails in one by one, using a single blow of the hoof with the left front foot for each nail. It never missed its lick, and always drove 'em just in to the head. Then he saw a few tacks on the post a little lower down, which were only half driven in, and he drove them in, too, with light blows of the hoof, just as gentle and easy as could be. Out days he came along and set out a can of nitro-glycerine and giant powder. He wanted to get the mule to kick it and get killed. I saw him about the corral with the can, and knew what was up. At first I was mighty much afraid for him, but then I thought if my mule was any kind of a mule at all he could take care of himself. So I just watched. Well, the mule saw the can, and walking coy-eyed out of it, and then squared himself for the kick. The man was sneaking off, and, just as the mule was going to kick the can, he caught sight of the feller, and changed his position so as to bring him in range, and let fly his right hoof. The can went flying through the air and hit the man just as he was gettin' over a fence about a hundred feet away. The thing exploded, and I never saw the man again. But next morning Pat Holland came out in the Record and said that the town had been visited by a shower of blood."

"Mules are immense when they git roused."

A British cavalryman suggests that the art of swimming on horseback be regularly practiced, whenever possible, by the British cavalry, and urges as a reason the recent loss of an entire squadron of the Tenth Hussars while attempting to ford the River Kabul. He mentions that last summer he saw a French cavalry regiment practice "mounted swimming" in the Seine. If either men or horses exhibited signs of nervousness, the practice was repeated until confidence had been obtained.

—It is now stated on good authority that a Mr. Edward Farrer, of Keene, N. H., in 1851 occupied his leisure moments in trying to transmit sounds over a telegraphic wire, and actually succeeded in telegraphing music. Three years after his first experiments he opened a correspondence with Prof. Silliman, of Yale College, but was far from receiving any encouragement, the reply he received was so disheartening that it led him to regard further attempt as hopeless.

—It is said of Northern Texas by the Dallas Herald that the tillers of the soil there make far more provisions than they have use for; always have corn and meat for sale, and their cotton and cattle crops come in as clear profit.

—Let no time be lost in the use of the harrow in the corn field. So soon as planted start the harrow and keep it going. Corn pays. Weeds do not. The most effectual way to raise good corn is to show the weeds no mercy. Now is the time to head them with the harrow.—Iowa State Register.

—An excellent method for starting cuttings is to partly sever the desired portion, leaving it sufficiently in connection with the main plant to preserve thrifty growth; when a callus is formed on the end of the cutting it may be transferred to its own pot and will root without difficulty.—Prairie Farmer.

—Hot water thrown upon the plants will kill the cabbage worm. Be careful that it is not hot enough to scald the outside leaves. Some have found success by mixing cabbage on a large scale—recommends a mixture of twenty parts of superphosphate of lime, one part of carbolic powder and three parts of fresh air-slaked lime, a small handful of which should be scattered over each head.—*N. —To relieve corns on the sole of the foot, cut a piece of stout card-board to fit the inside of the sole of the shoe. The card-board must be large enough in every way to prevent it shifting under the foot in walking. Cut a round hole in it exactly where the corn rests, and place the board in the shoe. The arrangement relieves the corn from the pressure and allows of its cure, and at the same time gives immediate relief in walking.

—A French pharmacist offers the following discovery for preserving eggs; namely, to use a solution of silicate of soda, which, being of a viscous and adhesive character, is kept in a liquid state by adding a little tepid water. Simply dip the fresh eggs in this and then dry them. When thoroughly dried and completely covered with the silicate solution, which any druggist can furnish, the eggs can then be put away, and will keep, it is stated, for more than a year without injury.

—Having just read the announcement of the death of a man from "oak poison," and knowing a certain cure, will you please publish it? I obtained it from the Druggists' Circular many years ago, and have applied it very many times, never having known it to fail. Dilute sweet spirits of nitre with the same quantity of cold water; apply with a white cloth every ten minutes until cured. When the skin is dry and contraction it seldom requires more than one application.—Cor. Burlington Hawk-Eye.

—There has been much said by good, common-sense people, as well as by physicians, against the use of much soda or saleratus in cooking. There is no doubt that it is of great injury to health when used as constantly as it is by many cooks. Physicians very generally agree that its frequent use debilitates and relaxes muscular strength, and is positively injurious to the digestion, and greatly weakens the tone of the bowels, often ending in acute inflammation. Dr. Alcott has no hesitation in saying that the almost universal habitual use of soda is one great cause of the great mortality, particularly among the young, from bowel complaints. The coats of the stomach and bowels are no weakened by the use of this alkali that they have no power to resist the debilitating effects of the intense hot weather.—Christian Union.

Harrowing Land.

Of all the implements used on the farm, there is but one, the plow, that is as necessary to good cultivation as the harrow, and, as a general thing, there is none that there is so little account made of by farmers. Good plowing is of the greatest importance in preparing the soil for any crop, but it is a well-known fact that there is too little good plowing done in the West, and, after a poor job of plowing has been done, a great deal depends on our being thorough with the harrow. Thus, also, we are a little negligent about, especially in preparing the land for corn. Our best planters do good work where the land is smooth and well pulverized, but we cannot expect them to do good work where the ground is in bad condition. In my opinion, the principal points of improvements made in harrows is in the greater number of teeth now used. This, more than any one thing, is essential, as the object is to work the surface.

Most harrows in use have about forty teeth, and that is not enough. My way is to have the frame made of small-sized scantling, and teeth not over three-eighth inches, and not less than sixty of them. We do not expect to work deep, and consequently a heavy frame and few teeth will not pulverize as well as a lighter frame and more teeth, while the draft is about the same. I have been using one made in three sections of two by two and a half inch stuff, four bars in a section, with twenty-seven adjustable steel teeth. By adjustable, I mean that when the draft bar is attached to one end, the teeth stand perpendicular, and, having a greater number of them, it does much better work than the old Scotch harrow. By attaching the draft at the other end, the points of teeth drop back four inches and make it a first-class smoothing harrow. This harrow retails at about twenty dollars. A big price compared with the old-fashioned forty-tooth affair, but cheap when the working value of each is taken into consideration. I speak of this one of mine as an illustration, and knowing that it is a good tool, perhaps other makers have as good, perhaps better ones than this. I think no farmer should be satisfied to use a poor harrow because it is cheap in price. Buy the best, if it costs more, as the difference in price will soon be made up in the extra work it will do.

Another fact is, we do not harrow our ground enough. Who ever heard a farmer say he had got his ground too smooth and fine? And how often do we think that we ought to lay out more work in putting in our crops? I would never buy a harrow that has less than sixty or seventy steel teeth, and one that has a simple and reliable arrangement of draft.—Cor. Prairie Farmer.

Hints on Butter-Making.

In the first place, keep your cows healthy; next, insure clean, sweet-tasting milk, and be sure that pails, strainers, etc., are clean and well scalded, for this is the foundation stone of a good butter. Do not set the milk more than two inches deep; for you will obtain almost as much cream from a pan half this size from a full one, and it rises much faster. The cream should be skimmed in from twenty-four to forty-eight hours; sweeter butter can be made from cream skimmed just as the milk is turning than can possibly be made from that which has stood for hours on lobbered milk. It is a great mistake to skim a lot of milk of different ages and churn immediately, for a large per cent. of the butter never comes at all; the cream should stand twelve hours in order to become well mixed and of the same degree of sourness.

It is a good plan to keep a smooth maple paddle in your cream crock and stir well after each skimming. Judgment must be used as to the temperature of the cream when ready to churn. If it is as warm as the air in a room which is comfortable to sit in, there will probably be no trouble about the butter coming. I like to set the cream on the table or a high shelf in the kitchen for some hours before churning (in the winter, of course). Avoid putting hot or cold water with the cream. If it is necessary to change the temperature, do so by placing the churn in hot or cold water, as the case demands. Don't be afraid to strike the bottom of the churn with the dash; a good, firm stroke will bring the butter sooner than the lifting and pressing process. When the butter is gathered, take it up and work thoroughly, pouring off the buttermilk as it works out. When it is pretty clear add salt to suit your taste; work the butter thoroughly, and stand twelve hours, then work till perfectly clear of milk. If you intend to keep the butter long, pack it in a stone crock and with the finger work each piece in, which should be added a tablespoonful of white sugar and as much powdered saltpeter will lay on a dime (if you haven't the latter a teaspoonful of fine salt will do.) The above is no theory, but the result of experience and experiments.

It is far less trouble to work the butter clear than to wash it, beside the fact that the water carries off some of the valuable flavor. Another cause of complaint. The coats of the stomach and bowels are no weakened by the use of this alkali that they have no power to resist the debilitating effects of the intense hot weather.—Christian Union.

Persons Seldom Buried Alive.

The newspapers contain every once in a while sensational accounts of the exhumation of bodies that give what is called unmistakable evidence of having been buried alive. Change in position of the corpse, often asserted to be proof of premature interment, usually results from chemical changes, especially from gases generated by decomposition. Some of the Pennsylvania journals have lately published a high-colored, horrible narrative of the unquestionable revival of a man who had been entombed three days at a town of that State. Items of his death having been excited, the grave was opened, and it was shown, according to the local chroniclers, that he had fought desperately for his life, imprints of his nails being visible on the lining of the coffin, in some places torn to shreds. This needs confirmation. It has in all probability been much exaggerated, and warmly lined with imagination. While such things have happened, and may still happen, they are of the rarest occurrence. Winslow, the celebrated anatomist, is said to have had two narrow escapes from burial alive, and to have published, in consequence, a treatise on the signs of death. Bouchut, Michel Levy and other physicians have also expressed their views on the subject; but all testimony proveurable establishes the fact that burial alive hardly ever takes place in these times. In corroboration of this, many German cities have in their cemeteries mortuary houses, in which the dead are kept some days before final interment, the bell-pull being so arranged that the slightest motion of the body would sound an alarm. So far these precautions have been superfluous. In more than forty years not one supposed-to-be corpse has proved to be anything else.—N. Y. Times.

Undressing Little Ned.

"Where is 'Whisky Bill,' who used to drive that old white horse in front of a twenty-f'ot quart express wagon?" repeated the man in tones of surprise.

"Yes."

"Well, now, it's a curious case," he slowly continued. "we all thought he'd gone to the dogs, for sure, for he was drinking a pint of whisky a day, but a few months ago he braced right up, stopped drinking, and now I hear he's in good business and saving money. It beats all, for the last time I saw him he seemed half underground."

When you go home at night and find that all is well with your own flesh and blood do you go to sleep reasoning that the rest of the world must care for itself? Do you ever shut your eyes and call up the hundreds of faces you have met during the day, and wonder if the paleness of death will cover any of them before the morrow? When you have once been stricken to a face, even if it be a stranger's, do you let it drop from memory with your dreams, or do you call it up again and again as night comes on, and ask if it may not be none of its brightness in the whirling mists of time?

So "Whisky Bill" was hunted down. An inquiry here and there readily traced him to a little brown cottage on a by-street. He sat on the step in the twilight, a burly, bronze shouldered man of fifty, and in the house three or four children gathered around the lamp to look over a picture-book.

"Yes, they used to call me 'Whisky Bill,' down town," he replied as he moved along and made room, "but it is weeks since I heard the name. No wonder they think me dead, for I've not set eyes on the old crowd for months, and I don't want to for months to come."

"They tell me you have quit drinking. One could see that by your face."

I hope so; I haven't touched a drop since February. Before that I was half-drunk day in and day out, and more of a brute than a man. I don't mind saying that my wife's death set me to thinking, but I didn't stop my liquor for good. forgive me, but I was drunk when she died, half-drunk at the grave, and I meant to go on a regular spree that night. It was low-down, but I was no better than a brute those days."

"And so you left your motherless children at home and went out and got drunk?"

"No. I said I meant to, but I didn't. The poor things were crying all day, and after coming home from the burial I thought to get 'em tucked away in bed before I went out. Polly, my oldest girl, never struck one of 'em a blow, and they never ran from me when I staggered home. There's four of 'em in there, and the youngest isn't quite two years yet. I got the older ones in bed all right, and then came Little Ned. He had cried himself to sleep, and he called for mother as soon as I woke him. Until that night I never had that boy on my knee, to say nothing of putting him to bed, and you can guess those big fingers made slow work with the hooks and buttons. Every minute he kept saying mother didn't do that way, and mother done this way, and the big children were telling little Ned how the quilts to throw their sobs. When I had his clothes off and his night-gown on I was ashamed and put down, and when the oldest saw tears in my eyes and jumped out of bed to put her arms around my neck I dropped the name of 'Whisky Bill' right then and forever."

"And Little Ned?"

"Maybe I'd have weakened but for him," replied the man, as he wiped his eyes. "After I got the child's nightgown on, what did he do but kneel right down beside me and wait for me to say the Lord's Prayer to him! Why, sir, you might have knocked me down with a feather! There I was, mother and father to him, and I couldn't say four words of that prayer to save my life. He waited and waited for me to begin, as his mother always had, and the big children were waiting, and when I took him in my arms and kissed him and asked Heaven to witness that my life should change from that hour. And so it did, sir, and I've been trying ever since to serve honest life. God helping me, no one shall call me 'Whisky Bill' again."

The four children, Little Ned in his night-gown, came out for a good-night kiss, and the boy cuddled in his father's arms for a moment and said:

"Good night, pa—good night, everybody in the house—good night, pa, up in Heaven—and don't put out the light till we get to sleep!"—Detroit Free Press.

A Mystery Explained.

Parlor scene. Mrs. Brown, who has spent the summer among the White Mountains in search of health, and who seems to have searched the whole mountain side without being able to find a pair of blooming cheeks or an inch of healthful skin. Mrs. White, who has remained at home because her husband could not afford to go, but whose fresh complexion and bright eyes seem to have caught their bloom and brightness from mountain breezes.

Mrs. Brown. Mrs. White, how well you are looking. If you will not think me impertinent, let me ask how you can keep so healthy in this dreadful city? I have been to the White Mountains, another even summer, in fact, and I can't keep off the doctor's list at that.

Mrs. W. (smiling)—I'll tell you the whole secret, Mrs. Brown. You remember how poorly I was last spring, some days even being confined to my bed. Dr. —— told Mr. White he send me to the mountains, but I knew he couldn't afford it, and I tried Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. Its effects were so marvelous that I soon had no further need of the mountains, for, in my opinion, one bottle of the Prescription and the Discovery is better than six weeks of the White Mountains for a sick woman. I have only been out of the city a week during the whole summer, then my husband and I went to Buffalo and stopped at Dr. Pierce's Invalids' and Tourists' Hotel. The baths and mechanical appliances for treating patients were alone worth going to see. Besides, our accommodations were better than we had at home. Breakfast, dinner and supper—no cooking, no dishes to wash, and the drives and scenery are superb. Let me advise you to use Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription and the Discovery, and if you are not benefited by the Invalids' and Tourists' Hotel next summer instead of the White Mountains.

We have long wanted a safe and reliable remedy for the cure of Chills and Fever, and now we think we have found it. Ayer's Ague Cure will fill the bill. Now, we see that Messrs. Hostetter & Smith publish the composition of their Bitters, and claim it cures Chills and Fever and Ague from which it is constructed a specific for the cure of Chills and Fever, Bumb Chills and all other diseases produced by malaria. Try it. It can be found in every Drug store.

Gen. N. P. Banks's eldest daughter is studying for the stage at Boston.

Lorne and Louise are next going to lay a college corner stone at Kingston.

Mrs. Josephine Vonner is the pioneer attorneyess of California, located at Sacramento.

Vice President Wheeler is sobering from a nervous attack which prevents his restful sleep.

Senator Bayard will make the address at the dedication of Washington Valley Village Intelligencer, June 10.

The Paris headsman, Roch, left 568 applicants for the position of successor, of whom 87 are medical men.

The monk Gravaud, whose inner pipe has made him famous, sings only occasionally in the churches of Rome.

Ah Ching, a twenty five year old Chinaman, was ordained a deacon in Trinity church, San Francisco, the other day.

The New York school superintendent Kellie has resigned for September 1, when he will take to preaching spiritualism.

Miss Irish, 20 years of age, conducts the foreign correspondence of the Interior Department, where she is assistant librarian.

The Russian Minister Shiskin and his wife reside in New York, there being no Greek church anywhere else on the Atlantic coast.

Asa Packer's constant regret in life was his lack of education; hence his munificent endowments of a university for the education of poor young men.

Edwin R. Negus and Henriette Monroe's deaf mutes, were married at Hartford Wednesday, and have thus founded a household in which there will be no jawing.

Mrs. Kate Sprague escaped a Washington photographer's bill, the other day, by swearing in court that she was a married woman and had no separate estate.

The nephews of Pope Pius IX have summoned the Cardinals to render an account of the inheritance, in spite of the endeavor of Leo XIII to avert the scandal.

Gen. Grant, it is explained, went to India in advance of the government vessel that intended to take him, in order to escape the sickly period in some portions of the country that he intended to visit.

Louis, the Chevalier de Pouilard whose pedigree goes back to the crusades, fell dead in the streets of Paris, the other day, while exercising his profession as patterer to a troupe of traveling jugglers.

The New York Legislature has reduced the pay of the legislative employes $40,000 per annum.

The Missouri legislators do up their work and go home right away. Their salary is one dollar a day.

Colored ex Congressman Rainey has been commissioned as internal revenue agent, and ordered to New York for duty.

An observant paper declares that Blaine is as bad among a field of Confederate brigadiers as a hornet in the midst of a drove of young horses.

The Hesperian intellect of the Louisville Journal proclaims that the Democrats have caught the Republicans in a trap, and committed them to Grantism a year before their time.

The Missouri Legislature having adjourned, the St. Louis Democrat gives it credit for being the most depraved and worthless body to which the great interests of a state were ever intrusted.

Secretary Sherman says that he could not accept the nomination for Governor of Ohio because so many persons are interested in the continued success of refunding and resumption that it would seem like the desertion of a public duty, and he thinks he would never be forgiven if any hindrance should occur in the way of either.

The Milwaukee Sentinel has been canvassing in that city and finds twelve men for Sherman to one for Grant. By selecting one field of investigation it might have found a dozen for Tilden to one for Sherman.

The Cincinnati Commercial says that Representative De La Matyr has "got a bib pinned under the coon of his country and a bowl of gruel ready to feed it with," and will not pair with any member lest he lose the opportunity.

The New York World suggests as an illustration for Democratic torchlight processions a ballot box translated by a bayonet. It would be an effective explanation of the work of the Democratic rifle clubs in the South, but it is doubtful if the Ku Klux will be green enough to parade it before the public eye.

Zach Chandler insists that he is not and will not be a candidate for the Presidency or the Vice Presidency. Well, then, he must quit making such pungent speeches, or the Republicans will hardly be able to let him alone in his present position. If he tries to leave the qualities they are looking for just now.—Cedar Rapids Republican.

"What I would aspire to in case public opinion should decide to make me a candidate for President would be to unite in cooperation with the Republican party, all the national elements of the country that contributed their aid in any way in the successful vindication of national authority during the war. I would do this not for the purpose of irritating the South or oppressing them in any way, but to assert and maintain the supremacy of the national authority to the full extent of all the powers conferred by the Constitution.—Secretary Sherman.

There are eight or ten Democratic Senators who would gladly contribute ten dollars apiece toward building a new church if Providence had never permitted Jim Blaine to be born.—Post and Tribune.

Notes and Nudges.

From the Detroit Post and Tribune.

BY JIMLIMAX.

—In a game of croquet there is no rest for the wicked.

—The National party seems to be entirely out of dried apples and warm water.

—I've struck hard pan, said the flint to the musket. At this the musket kicked.

—The clerk of the weather has been obliged to employ another shorthand reporter.

—A Kalamazoo woman has made 100 chair tidies. She must be a very tidy woman.

—Asa an artist Senator Chandler is eminently successful. Democratic cats a specialty.

—In Congress the majority of bodies are on the Democratic side—the majority of brains on the other.

—If Tilden should ever be President he would have a rare collection of old fossils in his Cabinet, very likely.

—Woman's method of warfare with woman used to be hair pulling. Now she grabs a "switch" the first thing.

—The Wabash directors must certainly want to extend their line to Detroit—they loom as though they did.

—Tilden sleeps alone, remarks an exchange. He may sleep alone, but he goes to bed with a guilty conscience every night.

—Some men are like peach trees. They do a good deal of blowing, but generally perform less than half what they promise.

—The reason why so many bankrupts visit the sea shore is because their business matters are all at sea, you know. Shore enough.

—After all, the best way is to call things by their right names. If you have cod liver oil to sell, you don't advertise ice cream, do you?

—No decent man should look at the New York Sun except through a smoked glass. He will hold his nose without waiting to be told.

—Mt. Vesuvius and the Democratic party have been in a state of eruption for some time. The former has, and the latter is, a bad crate.

—A friend desiring to visit some popular "watering place" this summer has written to a milkman just outside of the city, inquiring the price of board.

—Ben Butler is reported as still having his eye on the governorship chair of Massachusetts. Well like to know how any body knows.

—Jeff Davis grows modest.—Exchange. Never quite recovered from the shock received when his agile form was stripped of its crinoline.

—A pretty milliner in New York city owns and drives a $1,000 span of bays. Being a milliner she knows how to handle the ribbons very skillfully.

—Ben Hill talks more like sojourning and going right straight home when Zach Chandler gets up to explain than words can express. And when Chandler gets through the Senator from Georgia looks as though he'd Ben Hill, without the H.

—The chairman of the Iowa Democratic Convention said that the Democrats would inaugurate the next President. We can remember back quite a few of years and it strikes us that such a proceeding would be almost entirely without precedent.

—A sick man sent to his family physician that he couldn't come again as he thought he could die without a doctor's assistance." When the widow paid the doctor bill she alluded to her departed husband's thoughtfulness in touching to us.

—These Democratic editors who have so much to say about our retreat at Bull Run may perhaps know by personal observation what they are talking about, but if they do, we are forced to the sad confession that we never knew before that the battle of Bull Run occurred in sight of Canada.

—Chicago thinks of sending detectives to St. Louis to find out what the population of that city is going to be in 1880. The committee on population has not yet met, but it is expected that they will make figures when they do meet that will bother the Chicago detectives to carry away with them.

—"That's a very delicate tint," said he to his alleged sweetheart, minutely examining her necktie. "Do you like it?" she lazily asked; and then she looked at her watch and told him it was after 11 o'clock. "Hm—that's a delicate hint, too," he observed. And again she asked, "Do you like it?" He held a queer way of showing it if he did.

—It would seem, judging from the poetical effusions that have been worked up regardless of expense at the state capital the present session, that the entire legislature, Republicans, Democrats and Nationals, have clamped digits across the yawning chasm and unanimously agreed to clean out Julia A. Moore if it takes all summer. It is difficult to tell where to bestow the most sympathy—upon poor Julia or the suffering public.

—A Kentucky man sat on a rail a la circulus pat. Two men were carrying the rail at the time. If the man had not been on the rail when those two men were carrying it, it would have been easier for them to have carried the rail than it was with the man on it. But the two men did not murmur. They told him he needn't get off. They told him he wasn't heavy. Besides, they said they liked the smell of tar and would rather have him stay on than not. So he stayed on. Some of the rail ders were white and some black, they stand on, too. It was a three cornered rail, from a four cornered town. It was the first time it had ever had anybody on its back so long. The men who carried it had a rail nice time. More so than the man who rode. He has moved now.

—Occasionally a faint echo comes from the voice of Horatio Seymour, like a drop of melted snow through a leaky roof, and like a flock of hens that dive to the spot expecting to find a kernel of corn, do the Democratic editors flop their wings and crow, or cackle, as the case may be, and scratch and chuck, and peck away at the faint echo as though they had found something. The great "your candidate I cannot be" hath again spoken and the gentle zephyrs float upon their invisible wings the ominous warning to the Republicans "THE PERSONS WHO UNITE THE ENTIRE DEMOCRATIC PARTY." Then, like him who wraps the drapery of his couch around him and lies down to pleasant dreams, doth Horatio take a rest, calmly and patiently awaiting the arrival of the mail which shall bring to him many and many marked copies, of Democratic papers; for the glory of the celestial is one and the glory of the terrestial is another. And so are you Horatio.

NEWS OF THE WEEK.

In reply to a resolution of inquiry, Sec'y Sherman reported to the Senate, on the 19th, that there had been redeemed in coin since Jan. 1, 1879, legal-tender notes to the amount of $4,105,943. Under the provisions of the Resumption act, the coin reserve of the Treasury had been increased to $128,000,000, that being about 40 per cent. of the notes outstanding to be redeemed, and believed to be the smallest reserve upon which resumption could be prudently commenced and successfully maintained. This reserve arose from the sale of $95,500,000 in bonds and from surplus revenue, and it must, under the existing laws, be maintained unimpaired for the purpose for which it was created.

JUDGE DUDLEY stated to a Omaha Herald reporter, on the 19th, in reply to certain remarks reported to have been made by Ben Sheridan in regard to the effect of the Judge's decision in the Ponca case, that such decision was based upon the fact that there was no United States law or treaty stipulations setting apart a reservation in the Indian Territory for those Indians, and for removing them thereto, or keeping them thereon, and that they could not, therefore, be removed there by force. It is not claimed, in the opinion, that Congress could not at any future time exercise such power, but as a treaty might modify or make which would justify a recurrence to force. It was also claimed that the decision would apply to those Indian tribes having reservations to which their treaties require them to remove and remain thereon.

CONCERNING the recent shooting at Provo City, Utah, of the murderer Wallace Wilkerson (who choose that manner of death in preference to hanging), a dispatch says the prisoner evinced great nerve, and sat in a chair facing three guns, distant about thirty feet, without either handcuffing or closing his eyes. At a signal from the Marshal, three concealed marksmen fired. He leaped from the chair exclaiming, "Oh, God!" fell forward on his face and continued writhing, breathing a few gasps, for twenty-seven minutes, when the physicians pronounced him dead.

AN Eastern telegram of a recent date says Mrs. Freeman, the wife of the Roxsaet (Mass.) Adventist, who killed his child as a sacrifice, as he claimed, by the command of a vision, had restored fully the enormity of the act, to "2 feb she presented at the time of its commission, and was constantly bemoaning the death of her child. She would be sorry for any food, and was said to be grieving herself to death.

A report from the Board of Home Missions which was read before the Presbyterian General Assembly, at Saratoga, on the 20th, the following interesting facts were shown: Number of missionaries engaged in the work, 1,392, Sunday-Schools organized in 1878 and 1879, 264; number of scholars, 111,881; churches organized during these years, 136; increase of membership, 10,872; total number of communicants in churches under control of the board, 69,415; aggregate of congregations, 107,781; number of Sunday-Schools, 1,157; number of church edifices, 1,057; value of same, $2,340,375; receipts for the year, $262,859.

ACCORDING to a Washington dispatch of the 21st, the Surgeon-General of the Marine Hospital Service had been instructed to transmit to the National Board of Health all papers belonging to the Treasury Department relating to disinfecting ships with yellow fever on board, and to inform the board that the Secretary of the Treasury will give prompt consideration to any suggestions that the Board of Health may make in relation to the subject.

THE Biennial Convention of the Young Men's Christian Associations of the United States met in Baltimore, on the 21st. Dwight L. Moody was elected President. The Treasurer's report showed the receipts for 1878-79 have been $16,870, and the expenditures $16,674, leaving a balance of two dollars. THE Broadway Savings Bank, of St. Louis, the largest institution of the kind in that city, suspended on the 21st. Over $400,000 of the money belonging to the public schools was deposited with it. The bank had a heavy line of depositors.

A RESOLUTION was unanimously adopted by the Presbyterian General Assembly at Saratoga, on the 22d, requesting Prof. Dr. Patton, of Chicago, not to accept the invitation to a professorship in England, but to remain in the United States. The report on Colored Missions represented the receipts from church sources as $52,921; from State School fund, $4,200. Expenditures on account of missions, $40,360; printing, $677; officers and investment, $9,416. There are forty-eight missionaries, of whom thirty-six are colored, and fifty-eight teachers, of whom thirty-six are colored.

THE will of the late Judge Packer, of Mauch Chunk, Pa., was read on the 23d. It gives $1,500,000 for the permanent endowment of Lehigh University, at Bethlehem, Pa.; $500,000 for a nursery for the same institution; $300,000 to St. Luke's Hospital, Bethlehem, and $300,000 to St. Mark's Episcopal Church, at Mauch Chunk. Several bequests are kept private for the present.

A WASHINGTON telegram of the 23d says that, at the rate at which the 4-per-cent. refunding certificates were being disposed of, they would all be sold within the succeeding ten days. They were being disposed of by purchasers to brokers at a premium of 02.25. There is a great rush for them at all Eastern and Western points where the Government agents were employed in putting them on the market.

J. M. FRENCH's menagerie establishment, near Detroit, was burned, on the morning of the 22d: one elephant, five lions, a zebra, leopard and other valuable animals perished in the flames.

THE seventh annual exhibition of the Chicago Inter State Industrial Exposition is announced to open on the 31st of September and close on the 18th of October.

A FIRE began in the buildings upon the Brooklyn (N. Y.) wharfs, a little after midnight, and it was soon on the 24th, before the flames were extinguished, having that time property variously estimated to be worth from 1,500,000 to 1,000,000 was destroyed.

A MAN named Nicholas Altenhofer, living in the Town of Kewaskum, Wis., on the 25th, caused his six-weeks-old child to be locks and beat out his brains on the kitchen wall. He then carried the dead infant two miles to a priest and acknowledged the crime.

THE Cashier of the lately-suspended Broadway Savings Bank, of St. Louis, J. P. Krieger, Jr., has been arrested for embezzlement and criminal conversion of the funds of the institution. Suits and criminal proceedings have also been commenced against the trustees.

A FISHERMAN named Pylus Walker, who lived near Niagara, was swept over the American Falls, on the 26th in the presence of a large crowd of excursionists. It seems Walker was under the influence of liquor at the time of the accident, and had no oar in the skiff current of the stream shoots the Falls while trying to tow to final island in a skiff. He was quite a noted character at the Falls, and had been the center of many lives exposed to danger in the rapids of the river.

Personal and Political.

THE Legislative, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill, slightly amended, was passed, in the United States Senate, on the 20th, by a vote of thirty-seven yeas to seventy-seven nays. The bill would go to the House for action on the Senate amendments. The vote in the Senate was:

YEAS—Allen, Anthony, Bell, Blaine, Booth, Bruce, Burnside, Cameron (Pa.), Cameron (Wis.), Chandler, Conkling, Edmunds, Ferry, Hill (Col.), Hoar, Ingalls, Kellogg, Kirkwood, Logan, McMillan, Morrill, Paddock, Platt, Rollins, Saunders, Teller, Windom—27.

THE State Colored Convention which met at Richmond, Va., on the 20th, adopted resolutions recommending the nomination of ex-President Grant for President in 1880.

GEN. ROBINSON, Chairman of the Ohio Republican State Central Committee, published a letter from Secty Sherman, on the 21st, in which the latter asked that he be not nominated for Governor, and stated that if nominated he should be compelled to decline.

A PROHIBITION Convention was held at Indianapolis, Ind., on the 21st, for the purpose of nominating a State ticket. Byland T. Brown was nominated for Governor; Rev. J. V. R. Miller for Lieutenant-Governor; Abraham Spahnaver for Secretary of State; William B. Hubbard for Treasurer, and Jeremiah Leiter for Auditor. An address to the people of the State was adopted, stating the necessity of independent political action if temperance were ever expected to accomplish anything. Resolutions were adopted to make a complete canvass of the State for Prohibition, and to demand a Prohibitory law of the next and all succeeding Legislatures, but in the meantime to accept the best Constitutional measures that can be obtained for abridging the liquor traffic.

ON the 21st, the Iowa State Democratic Convention met in Council Bluffs, and nominated the following ticket: For Governor, H. H. Trimble; Lieutenant-Governor, J. D. Yeomans; Supreme Judge, Reuben E. Noble; State Superintendent, Irwin Baker. The platform adopted demands the strict construction and observance of the Constitution and its amendments; declares that the State and General Governments should be strictly restrained to their respective spheres, and allowed to receive only their Constitutional powers; condemns the policy and purposes of the Republican party; commends the attitude of the Democratic members of Congress; favors the substitution of legal tenders for National Bank notes; advocates unlimited coinage of silver dollars, etc., etc.

ANNOUNCEMENT was made, on the 21st, that Supt Kiddle, the head of the New York City public school system for the last ten years, had resigned, and that his resignation had been accepted. It seems Kiddle was under the influence of liquor at the time of the accident, and had no car in Hewitt current of the stream shoots the Falls while trying to tow to final island in a skiff. He was quite a noted character at the Falls, and had been the center of many lives exposed to danger in the rapids of the river.

A correspondent of the Carson City (Mich.) Commercial says:

We find as intelligent and enterprising a people at Charlevoix as we have found anywhere in Michigan. We have not seen a drunken man in the place, and profanity and Sabbath-breaking are not so fashionable as in most parts of the state. Our boarding place is at the "Fountain City House," Sheriff Cooper proprietor, and is as quiet and pleasant a home as a stranger can desire.

THE following bills making changes in the laws effecting schools have passed both branches of the legislature. A building committee in a school district can perform only such duties in superintending the work of building the school house as the district by vote may direct. Any woman of or above the age of 21 years, who has resided in this state three months, and in the township ten days next preceding any election, shall be eligible to the office of school inspector or of superintendent of schools.

SUBDIVISION NOTES of Springvale Township, in this county, has been giving the Petoskey Record some statistics and here they are:

No. of acres chopped, 735. No. of acres cleared, 345. Acres of wheat last year, 94. No. of bushels raised, 897. Acres of wheat now on ground, 117. Acres of corn last year, 37; No. of bushels raised, 3,147. Acres of oats, 95; No. of bushels raised, 425. Acres of peas, 1; No. of bushels raised, 12. Acres of potatoes, 23½; No. of bushels raised, 2,251. Acres of hay, 145; No. of tons, 305. Milch cows, 29. Horses, 5. Cattle other than milch cows, 39. No. of hogs, 137.

We have before me a copy of the Okolona Southern States, from which we take the following:

There ought to have been a hanging spree on the day that Lincoln declared war.

He ought to have been hauled heels tormost out of the White House and swung up to the first tree.

He was the arch traitor of his age, and his memory is more odious and more infamous than that of any other thug in history.

How do loyal Democrats relish this pill? Yet this paper is indorsed by the Democratic papers of the South, and many of the North Democrats can't say this is a humbug, as we clipped the extract from a copy of the identical traitorous sheet, a copy of which is taken in Charlevoix.

Carpenter & Bartholomew have got their store remodeled and newly painted, and what is still better, a nice assortment of new goods. Call and see them.

—The schooner Pride, which left here the 24th with wood and bark for Milwaukee, sprung a leak, and was compelled to go into Sheboygan and sell her cargo. She lost part of her deck-load.

—Lightening struck the mizzen mast of the schooner City of Sheboygan, off Racine one day last week, ran into the cabin and seriously injured the captain, mate and two men. Capt. Wilson, late of the tug Tillson, was put in command of her temporarily. She made a trip to Suttons Bay last week, and Captain Wilson visited this village Sunday.

We congratulate him upon his success in the publication of the Sentinel and in the possession of so fine an establishment, but fear these things have turned his head a little, causing him to forget to be gentlemanly.—Traverse Bay Eagle.

Now, Bro. Sprague, we ask pardon.

THE HARBOR WORK.—Natt Stickney, of the firm of Carkin, Stickney & Cram, who have been awarded the contract on Charlevoix harbor, arrived here Saturday, and has taken the first step toward the work by sub-letting the timber work to Hon. John Nichols, who will at once proceed to secure the timber. Mr. Stickney expects to have a dredge at work here the present month. The unfinished contract on last year's work, has not yet been commenced by contractor Dale, who would be received here by an affectionate and admiring public with open arms. We are informed that Dale had the cheek to tender a bid on this year's work, and stood next to Carkin Stickney & Cram, in the list, for which we are devoutly thankful

To Health Seekers.

The invigorating and healthful properties of the climate by the Charlevoix and Pine Lake region are becoming so well known and recognized, as to be proverbial. Instances are on record where persons who were invalids for years have by the sojourn of a summer at Charlevoix entered the rosy hue of health on their pale cheeks, and a firm tread to their weak limbs.

Here nature the combines all the subtle medicines. She has provided diversion for the mind—a primary requisit in the search for health—beauty for the eye to feast upon in our romantic scenery, water as pure and cool as any in the known world, and air such as only the Northern lake region can furnish.

The facilities for pleasure are superior to any in Northern Michigan. We have two fine steamers making semi daily trips to points on each of the lake, and to the best fishing ground in the Northwest. We are situated directly upon the great lake thoroughfare in full view of the broad lake, and receiving the full benefit of its cooling breezes.

Charlevoix is ready of access, and we urge upon all health and pleasure seekers to give Charlevoix a trial.

AN altercation occurred at the Saturday night, between H. H. Blake, clerk of the Occidental, and Jo O'Neill, proprietor of the Lake House, over the possession of a cigar. Draper in reply to some remark from McNeil, applied a harsh epithet to him, whereupon McNeill struck Draper on the head with a billiard cue, which he presented before the bar-keeper. The mule was incarcerated, and the owner of the hog received the usual fee of fifty cents, with which he released his animal. The laugh was on President Rose.

ANOTHER VETO MESSAGE.

The President Refuses to Sign the Legislative Appropriation Bill Recently Passed by Congress—His Reasons in Detail.

WASHINGTON, May 20.

The following message of the President was delivered to the House of Representatives to-day:

To the House of Representatives:

I am constrained by my convictions of the public interest to withhold my approval of the bill (H. R. 3,933) making appropriations for the legislative, executive and judicial expenses of the current and other purposes. I herein return it to the House of Representatives in which it originated, with the following objections to its provisions:

The fifth provision of the bill is to appropriate $5,000 to support, during the incoming year, the usual contingencies of the commission to investigate and report the proceedings of the Geneva tribunal of arbitration. The money is needed to pay the usual and unavoidable incidental expenses of the commission. Legislation is not required.

I am entitled to no other provisions now in the bill. I am opposed to the policy of attaching a number of clauses relating to subjects of general legislation to appropriation bills. I am opposed to the application which is sometimes made to appropriations for the purpose of securing votes for measures which could not otherwise be passed. I am opposed to the practice of tacking to appropriation bills new provisions limiting the rights of the Executive in the exercise of his constitutional functions. I am opposed to the practice of including in appropriation bills provisions which are not germane to the subject matter of the bill. I am opposed to the practice of including in appropriation bills provisions which are not germane to the subject matter of the bill. I am opposed to the practice of including in appropriation bills provisions which are not germane to the subject matter of the bill. I am opposed to the practice of including in appropriation bills provisions which are not germane to the subject matter of the bill.

The practice of tacking to appropriation bills provisions which are not germane to the subject matter of the bill is subversive of the constitutional powers of the Executive and of the House of Representatives. It is subversive of the constitutional powers of the Executive because it prevents him from exercising his constitutional right to the veto. It is subversive of the constitutional powers of the House of Representatives because it prevents them from exercising their constitutional right to vote upon the

CHARLEVOIX, MICH.

WILLARD A. SMITH.
EDITOR AND PROPRIETOR.

TUESDAY, JUNE 10, - - - 1879

FOR PRESIDENT IN 1880,

ULYSSES S. GRANT.

OUR RADIX LETTER.

New York, June 6, 1879.

EDITOR SENTINEL.

The past week will be a memorable one in Catholic annals, for the opening of St. Patrick's Cathedral, on Fifth avenue, which has been many years in building, and is the grandest and most imposing church structure in America. The ceremonies, which occupied the greater part of Sunday, May 25th, had been long pre arranged and pre announced, and attracted a multitude so vast that the thousands who crowded the edifice were but a handful to the multitude that surged about the outside of the cathedral with such an eager pressure that 250 policemen had to form a regular fire line to prevent a delay and overpowering rush. Admission was by tickets, which had to be produced beforehand, and very many instances were roundly paid for. The ceremonies themselves were of the most brilliant and sumptuous character. Seldom outside of Rome or Paris has such an ecclesiastical pageant been witnessed as here celebrated the dedication of this magnificent centre and home of the Roman hierarchy in America. The participants were Cardinal McCloskey and most of the American archbishops, assisted by innumeral priests and acolytes, the whole performing a procession, whose robes and jewels and decorations, with the dazzling white marble and rich stained glass of the interior, presented to the eye a kaleidoscopic series of gorgeously colored pictures.

Of the ceremonies themselves I cannot of course attempt to give an account, as a description of them occupies a full page of fine type in the city papers. They consisted in general of sprinkling the doors and other portions of the building with holy water, marching and counter-marching by the priestly host, the chanting of interminable prayers, the whole liberally interspersed with music of a high order. At night when the cathedral was lighted up for its first evening service, a beautiful effect was produced which an eye-witness thus describes: "No sooner had the electric sparks lighted up the gas jets that encircled the foliated capitals of the massive columns and had darted from pillar to pillar—shedding a flood of radiance on the wide expanse of nave and aisle below, bringing the architectural details of the high altar into bold relief and investing them with an unearthly beauty—than a strange sight presented itself to those who were on the streets immediately adjoining the edifice. There appeared in habiliments of fire, radiant features and dazzling splendor, the saints, the martyrs and the confessors of the Catholic Church on the stained and storied windows. Scenes from Scripture and from the lives of the saints shone amid the darkness of the night, and to lookers-on was revealed an optic traced in fire on each window. Despite the rain that fell with disagreeable persistency at the time, this grand revelation of art attracted the attention of passers-by and lined the streets with groups of interested gazers. Within, the noble proportions of the structure were ethereal ized in the blaze of a thousand lights, and the rich mouldings and beautiful tracery seemed to gain additional charms."

During the week, an auction sale was held at the cathedral for the purpose of realizing as much as possible from the natural desire among rich parishioners for choice pews in their chosen place of worship. First choice was run up to $2,105, at which figure it was obtained by Mrs. Navarro, wife of the vice-president of the Metropolitan Elevated road. Succeeding choices were sold at constantly dwindling figures until some $13,000 had been realized in these bonuses, which, of course, have nothing to do with the regular rent of the pews.

Another somewhat notable event in this general connection was the meeting held by the assembled prelates the day after the grand dedication, to consider, under the leadership of the Cardinal, plans for the cancellation of the enormous debt of Archbishop Purcell, of Cincinnati, who was on here to attend the opening of the cathedral. The knotty question, which has caused so much public and private dissension since the archbishop's insolvency became known, was handled with the vigor and business capacity which is so singularly characteristic of Catholic administration generally, and a plan for an organized subscription throughout the country was matured, which bids fair to bring a satisfactory settlement of the saintly bankrupt's affairs.

Another notable event of this week was the celebration on the 18th of the centenary of Thomas Moore's birthday. In the afternoon, a colossal bronze bust of the poet was unveiled in Prospect Park, which appropriate ceremonies; and in the evening, the Academy of Music was thronged with a fine audience, whose entertainment consisted in eulogies of the great minstrel, alternating with performances by well-known vocalists of his most celebrated melodies.

Decoration Day was this year observed in about the usual manner, or perhaps indeed a little more generally than common, on account of the exceptionally fine weather, which allured from their occupations many people who, as a rule pay little attention to holidays. Flags and excursions, processions and speeches, all liberally besprinkled with flowers, made up the order of the day.

The Reverend Talmage celebrates his acquittal by taking a three months vacation in Europe. He sailed on Wednesday last, accompanied by his wife and daughter, and the large portion of the congregation that went down the bay in the steamer Grand Republic to see him off, kept up an almost continuous cheer for "the Domine." The elders of his church, most of his church members, Arbuckle bearing his cornet, and the majority of the Presbyters who recently voted that Dr. Talmage had not been guilty of falsehood and deceit, were in the steamer. They made a great time over their eccentric pastor, who waved an adieu as long as he could be seen, while the band played "Auld Lang Syne," and Arbuckle gave, as a parting solo, "Praise God, from whom all blessings flow." Dr. Talmage will deliver a series of lectures in England, under the management of Mr. Pond, of late Henry Ward Beecher's lecture agent. He will return home to preach on the first Sunday of September.

Freeman, the Potsdam child murderer still holds to the divine direction for his deed, but Mrs. Freeman is actually dying of remorse, even while holding that they acted in accordance with a perfect and absolute faith, and were guilty of no crime.

The Democratic Backdown.

The Democratic joint committee, on the 31st, finally resolved to back down, and selected the particular knot-hole through which the party will retire. After a long and anxious study of the situation, in front of the last veto message, and a vain attempt find some way to dodge it, the committee resolved upon a plain, unmistakable backdown and back out. Senator Thurman was the first man to go through the knot-hole—the leader in the surrender. Having resolved to back down and back out, of course, with the usual perversity of the Confederate Democratic nature, the committee resolved to retire making faces at the President to the last. They will pass the appropriation bills, including the army bill, without the veto of troops used for police purposes to keep the peace at the polls. This does not amount to much. If troops are used at all for such a purpose—which may not be needed—the fact that they will be used according to law will make their subsistence, pay, and transportation a legal claim on the United States, which must be and will be paid from some fund. But suppose—dreadful thought!—the President should veto even this little exhibition of spite? The proposition, if put in the bill, will be examined carefully, and, if it practically is of no account, no objection will be made to the Confederate Democrats making fools of themselves. But if it practically takes from the national government any of the just powers which the President regards it will be devoted; and then will have to be yet another Confederate Democratic backdown.

The committee resolved to pass the Legislature, Executive and Judicial Appropriation bill also without the veto of riders, but with a proviso that none of this particular money shall be used to pay supervisors of election, or deputy marshals, at elections, etc. As these are officers established by law, and as the law already on the statute book provides for their pay, this proviso will be merely an exhibition of spite, probably. If there is found any danger in it, on due examination, it will be vetoed.

How great is the Confederate Democratic back down may be judged by the programme announced in the beginning by Beck, of Kentucky, and confirmed afterward by many other leaders. Beck declared that the Democratic party had resolved to repeal the law allowing the use of troops to enforce the laws, and to repeal the national election laws, "and it will be for the President to determine whether he will block the wheels of government rather than allow the representatives of the people to repeal odious laws," etc. The threat was distinct that these laws must be repealed; and, unless the President yielded, the wheels of government would be blocked, by refusing to pass the appropriations. "Whether this course is right or wrong," added Mr. Beck, "it will be adopted, and I have no doubt adhered to, no matter what happens with the appropriation bills." But it isn't adherred to; it is backed down from.—Detroit Post and Tribune.

All of the Nationals in Congress have been interviewed, and their organ, the National View, puts their several declarations in print. They all pronounce squarely against any coalition with the Democrats in any of the states, particularly in Ohio.

Hogs, 6 In the spring of 1877, there were about nine families in the township, and there are now 23, with plenty of room for more, and soil, that denuded of its magnificent forests, needs but a little tickling with a hoe to yield abundantly. It also, like Spring vale, is noted for its general health, the births for the past year being 3, and the deaths, none.

There are in the Township, 23 acres of orchards. There are in the Township 31 cows, 24 horses, 49 oxen, and 65 hogs.

—Supervisor Keat, of South Arm, sends us the following: Population, 643, an increase of two hundred and forty five since the census of 1874; number of births for the year 1878, 28; deaths, 5. Crops were generally very light. Wheat raised, 3,270 bushels, against 3,025 of the year previous, number of acres now in the ground, 282; number last year, 274.

Mr. Robbins, of North Carolina, is quoted by a correspondent of the Albany Journal as saying of Senator Hill: "When the rest of us were seceding Hill wanted to stay in. He didn't get his fighting blood up till the war was nearly over; then he wanted to keep it up after everybody else was ready to quit. A peace man in war, a war man in peace; that's what Hill is."
